Iran raises US ire

NEW YORK: Hours after criticising America so fiercely that US diplomats stormed out of the UN General Assembly, Iran President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad said time has not run out for the two countries to repair their bad relationship.

In an interview, Ahmadinejad claimed explosive material and not planes brought down the World Trade Centre, rejected the West's view of his country's nuclear ambitions and castigated US foreign policies.

But he also complained that President Barack

Obama never made good on a pledge to try to open a dialogue with Iran, and said he still hoped for a face-to-face meeting.

"I don't believe that this is a chance that has been completely lost," Ahmadinejad said.

The White House declined to comment.

Ahmadinejad provoked a walkout by diplomats at the General Assembly when he attacked the US and Europe as being arrogant.

Ahmadinejad also said Iran was ready to negotiate over its disputed nuclear program.

Protesters rally against Pope Benedict XVI in Berlin yesterday as he addresses Germany's Parliament, warning politicians not to sacrifice ethics for power, and evoking Nazi excesses as a lesson
