SCHEDULE 4 Constitutional Principles 1-175
A. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

1. This Paper considers the options for adopting a Bill of Rights in the Northern Territory, as part of its further constitutional development, including the option of an entrenched Bill of Rights in a new Northern Territory constitution. It does not attempt a comprehensive analysis of the various types of rights that might be included in such a Bill of Rights, given the voluminous literature already on this subject. It does, however, look at some of the subjects that might be included in a Northern Territory Bill of Rights, and the possible mechanisms for dealing with those rights.

2. The Committee stresses that it does not advocate that such a Bill of Rights should be included in a new Northern Territory constitution. However the Committee wishes to raise for consideration whether there should be a Northern Territory Bill of Rights, and if so, how it should be administered and enforced, and also the extent to which it should be entrenched (if at all) in a new Northern Territory constitution.

3. The paper will not be considering the question whether a Bill of Rights should be included in the Australian Constitution. No doubt such a national Bill of Rights would have implications for any Northern Territory equivalent, but this is not a relevant consideration to the work of the Committee at this time.

4. The proposals canvassed in this Paper also bear upon the options that relate to constitutionally entrenching Aboriginal rights. However, these options are fully dealt within the Committee's Discussion Papers Number 4 and 6.1

5. The purpose of this Paper is to stimulate debate and invite comments and suggestions by way of submissions to the Committee on the subject of rights in the Northern Territory generally.

6. Particular issues raised in this Paper on which comment and suggestions are sought include:

(a) The Merits or otherwise of adopting a Bill of Rights in the Northern Territory or whether this should be dealt with at the federal level only.

(b) Should there be a Bill of Rights at all.

(c) Whether a Bill of Rights be:

i. entrenched in a new Northern Territory constitution;

ii. in the preamble to a new Northern Territory constitution.

iii. be incorporated in an organic law (a form of legislation that requires a special majority of Parliament for change).

iv. be incorporated in ordinary legislation only.

(e) Possible contents of a Northern Territory Bill of Rights that address three major groups of rights:

i. political and civil rights relating to an individual's right to actively participate in society and government.

ii. economic and social rights relating to an individual's right to basic economic independence.

iii. community and cultural rights relating to the exercise of rights by an individual or in community with others.

(f) Possible contents of a Northern Territory Bill of Rights that address specific groups of rights:

i. The right to life.

ii. Torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

iii. Slavery.

iv. Rights to liberty and security of the person.

v. The rights of people detained.

vi. Imprisonment for contractual default.

viii. The right to a fair trial.

ix. Retrospective offences and/or penalties.

x. The right to privacy.

xi. Freedom of thought, conscience and religion.

xii. Freedom of expression.

xiii. Freedom of assembly.

xiv. Freedom of association.

xv. The right to participate in public affairs.

xvi. Non discrimination and equal protection of the law.

xvii. Other rights such as:

(a) The right to own property and to fair compensation for the arbitrary deprivation of property.

(b) The right to freedom from arbitrary or unreasonable searches, entry and seizures.

(c) Equality of the sexes.

(d) The rights of the child.

(e) The right to petition government.

(f) The right to trial by jury.
(g) The right to freedom of information.
(h) Language and cultural rights of minorities.
(i) Administrative rights and natural justice.
(j) The right to education.

(g) Should any Northern Territory Bill of Rights be capable of being enforced by the Courts or by some other mechanism, or should it be left to administrative and parliamentary procedures to review any breaches, or as an aid to legislative interpretation only.

(h) If the Bill of Rights is to be included in the new Territory constitution, to what extent should it be constitutionally entrenched?

B. INTRODUCTION

I. Terms of Reference

(a) On 28 August 1985, the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory of Australia by resolution established the Select Committee on Constitutional Development.

Amendments to the Committee's original terms of reference were made when it was reconstituted on 28 April 1987. On 30 November 1989, the Legislative Assembly further resolved to amend the terms of reference by changing the Committee's status to a sessional committee. On 4 December 1990 and on 27 June 1994, it was again reconstituted with no further change to its terms of reference.

(b) The original resolutions were passed in conjunction with proposals then being developed in the Northern Territory for a grant of Statehood to the Territory within the Australian federal system. The terms of reference include, as a major aspect of the work of the Committee, a consideration of matters connected with a new State constitution.

The primary terms of reference of the Sessional Committee are as follows:

"(1)... a committee to be known as the Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development, be established to inquire into, report and make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on -

(a) a constitution for the new State and the principles upon which it should be drawn, including -

(i) legislative powers;
(ii) executive powers;
(iii) judicial powers; and
(iv) the method to be adopted to have a draft new State constitution approved by or on behalf of the people of the Northern Territory; and

(b) the issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the Federation as a new State; and

(c) such other constitutional and legal matters as may be referred to it by -

(i) relevant Ministers, or

(ii) resolution of the Assembly.

(2) the Committee undertake a role in promoting the awareness of constitutional issues to the Northern Territory and Australian populations.”

2. Purpose of this Paper

(a) This Discussion Paper constitutes the eighth in a series of discussion papers issued by the Committee. It looks at the options for adopting a Bill of Rights in a new Northern Territory constitution. It does not attempt a comprehensive analysis of the various types of rights that might be included in such a Bill of Rights, given the voluminous literature already on this subject. It does, however, look at some of the subjects that might be included in a Northern Territory Bill of Rights, and the possible mechanisms for dealing with those rights.

(b) The Committee has reviewed a considerable body of literature in assessing the options for the Northern Territory. It has found particular assistance from the Victorian Legal & Constitutional Committee Report, the Queensland Electoral and Administrative Review Commission Report and the Attorney-General's Department (ACT) Issues Paper - 1993 as well as other publications.

(c) The Committee is not to be taken as necessarily advocating that such a Bill of Rights should be included in a new Northern Territory constitution. This is an issue upon which views will differ and on which Committee members have yet to make up their minds. The Committee invites public comment.

(d) The Committee wishes to raise for consideration whether there should be such a Northern Territory Bill of Rights, the contents of any such Bill of Rights, how it should be administered and enforced, and also the extent to which it should be entrenched in a new Territory constitution. The options in this regard are discussed below.

(e) The Committee will not be considering the question whether a Bill of Rights should be included in the Australian Constitution. This is a separate, national issue, upon which the Committee does not need to express any opinion. No doubt such a national Bill of Rights...
Rights would have implications for any Northern Territory equivalent, but at this stage the Committee is not aware of any such firm proposals at the national level.

(f) The proposals in this Paper obviously apply to all Territorians, including Aboriginal Territorians. The question whether there should also be any constitutionally entrenched Aboriginal rights is dealt with in the Committee's Discussion Papers Number 4 and 6.

3. Discussion and Information Papers

The Committee has prepared and issued a number of papers and an interim report arising from its terms of reference, as follows -

* A Discussion Paper on a Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory, plus an illustrated booklet of the same name.
* Discussion Paper No. 4, Recognition of Aboriginal Customary Law.
* Discussion Paper No. 5, The Merits or Otherwise of Bringing an NT Constitution into Force Before Statehood.
* Discussion Paper No. 6, Aboriginal Rights and Issues - Options for Entrenchment.
* Information Paper No. 1, Options for a Grant of Statehood.
* Interim Report No. 1, A Northern Territory Constitutional Convention.

4. Relevant Issues Raised in Previous Committee Papers

(a) In the Committee's Discussion Paper on A Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory,\(^6\) for ease of reference called the Discussion Paper, the question was raised whether the new State constitution should contain any provisions dealing with human rights.\(^7\)

(b) Since the publication of the Committee's Discussion Paper in 1987, the Constitutional Commission's Final Report\(^8\) delivered to the Commonwealth Government in 1988, recommended that a new Chapter be added to the Australian Constitution on rights and freedoms of a comprehensive kind. Subsequently, in the 1988 National Referenda, a limited number of constitutional proposals of a human rights nature were put to the Australian people in conjunction with other proposals, but the referenda failed.

(c) Neither the Commonwealth nor the States have since embarked upon a course of attempting to include a bill of rights in their respective constitutions.

ITEM T. HUMAN RIGHTS

1. The question arises as to whether the new State constitution should contain any provisions dealing with human rights - for example, freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of assembly etc. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as adopted by the United Nations in 1948, conveniently summarises the main human rights of interest and is contained in Part X below.

2. No Australian constitution contains any comprehensive provisions of this nature. The Commonwealth Constitution contains some limited provisions which could be described as coming within this category, but the courts have in most cases given them a fairly limited application. The constitution of Tasmania contains a provision dealing with religious freedom. The constitutions of other States are silent on any matters pertaining to the citizen's rights.

3. By way of contrast the Constitution of the USA and the constitutions of the States of the USA contain comprehensive bills of rights. The constitutions of many countries have similar guarantees of civil and political rights, of the nature contained in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Relevant extracts from the Constitution of USA and Canada are also attached in Part X below by way of example.

4. The constitutions of some countries go further and provide for other rights of the nature contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. However, not all of these countries have an independent Judiciary, and the real value of some of these statements of rights is questionable.

5. The question whether Australia should have legally enforceable guarantees of civil and political rights has been hotly debated in recent years. Australia is a signatory to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and various other international human rights instruments, and has legislated to implement in part these instruments in the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission Act 1986, the Racial Discrimination Act 1975 and the Sex Discrimination Act 1984. However, attempts to pass a comprehensive Human Rights Act in the Commonwealth Parliament have not succeeded. As a consequence, generally speaking it is not possible to found a cause of action or a defence in an Australian court based solely on an internationally recognized human right.

6. The Constitutional Commission’s Advisory Committee on Individual and Democratic Rights, in its 1987 Report, has recommended that the Commonwealth Constitution be amended to expand and entrench specified human rights. These include rights relating to trial by jury and the criminal process, freedom of religion, movement, expression and assembly, equality before the law, acquisition of property on just terms, voting and citizenship rights and other matters, not limited in operation to matters over which the Commonwealth has jurisdiction. The report proposes the insertion of a new preamble in the Constitution.”

(d) The Discussion Paper outlined arguments for and against a Bill of Rights.9

(e) It will be observed that the Committee did not make any recommendations on this subject in its Discussion Paper at that time, but left it open for public comment.

(f) There were a considerable number of people and organisations that responded to the Committee's invitation to comment on the Discussion Paper concerning the question of a possible Territory Bill of Rights. Several commentators were totally opposed to the idea, preferring to leave the matter to the common law and ordinary legislation. Some others felt it was a matter which should be dealt with at a federal level only. A majority of the commentators favoured a Territory Bill of Rights, either in a preamble to the constitution or in the Territory constitution proper. Certain commentators stressed the need for the protection of particular rights. For example, the Council of Government Schools Organisation sought provisions as to the right to education. Mr R G Kimber advocated freedom of the press, freedom of information and freedom of access to land. The Women's Advisory Committee placed emphasis on provisions against sex discrimination. Other commentators stressed freedom of religion (including aspects of Aboriginal religion, such as sacred sites). A number of commentators felt that it was a matter in which the Territory should take a lead, notwithstanding the absence of any comprehensive statement of rights at a federal level or elsewhere in Australia.

(g) A list of those persons or organisations that commented on this aspect of the Committee's Discussion Paper is attached to this Paper as Appendix 1.

(h) In addition to matters dealing specifically with human rights, the Committee has already dealt with a number of related issues in its Discussion Paper. In part, these concerned the strong belief in the need for a representative and democratic parliamentary system in the Northern Territory; in part these concerned the recommendations designed to ensure the independence of the Territory judiciary.

(i) In the case of the Parliament, it is of some relevance to note that the Committee tentatively advocated a fully representative unicameral legislature, directly elected by adult Territory residents to single member electorates by a system of secret ballots, for

ITEM T. HUMAN RIGHTS:

"7. There are arguments for and against the adoption of an enforceable statement of human rights in the new State constitution. Those arguments for such a proposal rely both on moral arguments and on the view that this is a desirable form of "check" against possible abuses by government or against undesirable legislation. Those arguments against the proposal stress the undesirability of the legislature abdicating its authority in these matters to the courts, the costs and delays potentially arising, the alleged adequacy of the common law as supplemented by legislation where found necessary or desirable in particular cases, and the fact that by prescribing some rights it may in some cases unduly limit other rights.

8. An enforceable statement of human rights entrenched in the new State constitution might or might not be expressed to subject to express change in specific matters by later ordinary legislation.

9. An alternative may be to include in the new State constitution a preamble setting out basic human rights or goals for the new State and its citizens, that preamble not giving rise of itself to enforceable legal rights but merely acting as an aid to the interpretation of new State legislation and its administration."
a term of a minimum of 3 years (subject to limited exceptions) with a maximum of 4 years. Ministers would be drawn from elected members only. The Committee therefore envisaged a constitutionally entrenched form of democracy on Westminster lines.

(j) The Committee also envisaged that Judges of the Supreme Court of the Territory would be given constitutional guarantees of independence, such that they could only be removed from office by the Governor upon an address in the Parliament for proven misbehaviour or incapacity. The independence of the judiciary is of course of great importance to the effectiveness of any constitutionally entrenched Bill of Rights.

(k) The subject of human rights was also briefly raised in the Committee's illustrated book on a proposed new State Constitution for the Northern Territory.

(l) Apart from matters specific to the Aboriginal people of the Territory, the Committee has not since had cause to discuss a possible Northern Territory Bill of Rights. It is, however, an issue that must be addressed in greater detail, hence this Paper.

(m) To assist in deliberations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the USA Bill of Rights and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as well as the relevant provisions in New Zealand, the European Community, Papua New Guinea and South Africa, are set out in Appendices 2-9 of this Paper. These are examples of provisions that might be drawn upon if the Northern Territory was to proceed with its own Bill of Rights.

C. BACKGROUND AND PRESENT POSITION

1. Statements of human rights have a long history. In Australia, it is possible to look back to the English inheritance in the Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights 1688, neither of which have an entrenched constitutional status and both of which have limited contemporary application in Australia.

The United Kingdom, unlike other countries such as France and USA, never adopted a Bill of Rights worded in more contemporary terms. As a consequence, Australia never inherited a similar document as part of its legal system.

2. The founders of the Australian Constitution, acting in accordance with this English inheritance, considered it unnecessary to frame a comprehensive statement of rights in 12 1988. Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Select Committee on Constitutional Development. Proposals for a new State Constitution for the Northern Territory - Have your Say!, Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory, Darwin.

In the past, the tendency of the High Court has been to give these few provisions in the Constitution a narrow, technical reading. There have, however, been recent indications on that Court of a more expansive approach to their interpretation.

The Australian Government has been active in recent decades in becoming a party to a wide range of United Nations Covenants and Conventions on human rights. An example is the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, a copy of which is at Appendix 2. In a number of cases it has domestically implemented these, in whole or part, by federal legislation, for example, the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission Act, 1986. Such legislation, insofar as it is proportionate to and gives effect to the international instruments in question, will be valid under the external affairs powers (s51(xxix)) of the Australian Constitution. It will prevail over any inconsistent State or Territory legislation.

More recently, the Australian Government has acceded to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to some other international human rights instruments, giving individual Australians a remedy of last resort to international bodies set up under those instruments.

There have been a number of attempts in recent years to introduce a Bill of Rights at a federal level in Australia by way of ordinary legislation, the last being the Bowen Bill of 1985. None were enacted.

Reference has already been made to proposed constitutional changes put to the people by national referendum in 1988 as part of a wider set of proposals. All these proposals failed to secure the necessary majorities.

Since 1988, support has slowly gathered for constitutional change on the subject of rights at the federal level. The Federal Government has not, at the time of writing, committed itself to any firm proposals. However, it is a matter now on the agenda for public discussion, particularly since the 1991 Constitutional Centenary Conference in Sydney.

13 Provisions for the federal Parliament to be directly elected by the people (ss7 and 24).
  . The right to vote (s41).
  . Freedom from compulsory acquisition of property under Commonwealth laws otherwise than on just terms, s51(3xxi).
  . Security of tenure for federal Judges (s72).
  . Trial by jury for Commonwealth indictable offences (s80).
  . No discrimination or preferences among the States in trade, commerce, and revenue (s51(ii), (iii), 88, 90, 92, 99).
  . Freedom of religion at the federal level (s116).
  . No disability or discrimination between residents of different States (s117).
  . No alteration of the Constitution without a national referendum of voters (s128).

14 see Appendix 2.
9. At a State level, a proposal was made by the Queensland Nicklin Government in 1959 to enact a Bill of Rights in that State. It never proceeded to a vote.

10. In 1987, the Legal and Constitutional Committee of the Victorian Parliament produced a report advocating the enactment in the Victorian Constitution of a non-enforceable Declaration of Rights and Freedoms, with investigation and report mechanisms by a permanent Parliamentary Committee. A Bill incorporating a Charter of Rights and Freedoms was introduced, but was criticised by the Opposition as having no teeth. It subsequently lapsed. However, in 1992, the Parliamentary Committees Act was amended to specifically vest in the Scrutiny of Acts and Regulations Committee the function of scrutinising every Bill that affects rights or freedoms.

11. More recently, the Queensland Electoral and Administrative Review Commission has advocated a constitutionally entrenched Bill of Rights in that State.

12. In an Issues Paper issued by the Attorney-General’s Department (ACT) in late 1993 submissions were invited on a range of options, being firstly an entrenched Bill of Rights either through Commonwealth legislation for the ACT or by an ACT enactment entrenched by referendum (a position facilitated by section 26 of the Australian Capital Territory (Self-Government) Act 1988), or secondly a non-entrenched Bill of Rights on the New Zealand model, or thirdly an Assembly Declaration of Rights and Freedoms, with an Assembly Committee to scrutinise legislation for compliance with the Declaration. The other option was the status quo. In 1994, a bill in the form of an exposure draft for an ACT Bill of Rights was circulated.

13. New Zealand now has a statutory Bill of Rights - see Item D below and Appendix 3.

14. The failure to introduce a constitutional Bill of Rights in Australia may in part be responsible for developments in the High Court, both in giving a wider interpretation to the few existing express provisions of relevance (see above) and also in deciding that certain rights are to be implied in the Australian Constitution. Thus, the High Court by a majority has recently enunciated an implied right of freedom of communication in political matters in the Australian Capital Television and the Nationwide News cases and in the following cases; Theophanous Stephens v WA Newspapers and Cunliffe, the exact scope of which is still somewhat uncertain. It appears that there may also be an implied doctrine of the underlying equality of all people under law; see Leeth’s\(^{23}\) case.

15. The High Court has also been active in developing the common law, such as in the Mabo\(^{24}\) case as to recognition of native title and in a variety of cases extending the concept of natural justice in administrative law.

16. There have been frequent calls for Australian courts to make increased reference to international human rights principles - for example the Bangalore Principles of 1988.\(^{25}\) Increasingly, Australian courts are making reference to these principles in their judgments, whilst not regarding themselves as bound thereby except in so far as Australian legislation so provides.

17. The territories of the Commonwealth (which at present include the Northern Territory) and their residents were previously thought not to have the benefit of any of the express guarantees in the Australia Constitution. For example, there is High Court authority for the proposition that the constitutional guarantee of acquisition of property only on just terms\(^{26}\) does not apply to an acquisition pursuant to laws made for a territory.\(^{27}\) However, more recent dicta of at least one member of the High Court has thrown some doubt on this position.\(^{28}\) The result is one of some uncertainty in territories.

18. This position may change should the Northern Territory become a new State. Absent any valid terms or conditions to the contrary as part of the creation of that new State, there seems to be no reason why all the guarantees in the Australian Constitution applicable to a State or a State resident should not apply equally to a new State or a new State resident. Arguably, it is not constitutionally possible to exclude the application of those guarantees to a new State and its residents.\(^{29}\)

19. However, the limited scope of such express constitutional guarantees, even if given a wider interpretation, offers little comfort to those who advocate that a comprehensive Bill of Rights should be adopted and be applicable to the Territory.

20. It should be noted that the Committee is considering whether the Northern Territory should adopt its own, home grown constitution even before it becomes a new State.\(^{30}\)

This would include the question whether as a Territory it should have a Bill of Rights in that constitution.

21. The Committee points out that under the present Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978, establishing the self-governing Northern Territory, there are some limited provisions of relevance to human rights. This includes the provisions for:

- the representative direct election of members of the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory;\(^{31}\)
- freedom of trade, commerce and intercourse between the Northern Territory and the States;\(^{32}\) and
- the requirement that Territory laws for the acquisition of property provide for just terms.\(^{33}\)

However, these provisions can be overridden by a later ordinary Commonwealth statute.

22. The Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory has also legislated on matters concerning human rights. For example, the Anti-Discrimination Act contains provisions similar to those in the States. Such legislation is supplemental to the common law, and operates in tandem with a variety of Commonwealth legislation, such as the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission Act 1986 and the Racial Discrimination Act 1975. None of this federal or Territory legislation has an entrenched constitutional status.

23. There is no domestic legal obligation on a State or Territory to bring its legislation into conformity with internationally accepted minimum standards of human rights. However, if the Australian Government has entered into international agreements or has incurred international obligations in these matters, it can provide the necessary constitutional capacity under the external affairs power for the Commonwealth Parliament to enact legislation to implement same, with the resultant capacity to override any inconsistent State or Territory legislation.

24. Conversely, there is no objection to a State or Territory legislating on human rights, providing it does not do so inconsistently with the Australian Constitution or with valid Commonwealth legislation. This capacity extends to the inclusion of human rights provisions in a State (including a new State) constitution. Whether such new State constitutional provisions would override any inconsistent Commonwealth legislation in its operation in that new State, relying on section 106 of the Australian Constitution, is uncertain.

25. In the context of a home grown Northern Territory constitution adopted prior to any grant of Statehood, and assuming that the Commonwealth was prepared to give that constitution legal force pursuant to Commonwealth legislation, the same reasoning applies as in the previous paragraph, namely, there is no lack of capacity in the Northern Territory to adopt its own constitution with a Bill of Rights. It would be subject to the Australian Constitution and to any inconsistent Commonwealth legislation.

26. The question for consideration is therefore whether the Northern Territory, as a new State or otherwise, should adopt a Bill of Rights in its own, home grown constitution, and if so, in what form?

D. POSITION IN SELECTED OTHER COUNTRIES

I. United States of America

(a) The original USA Constitution did not contain a Bill of Rights. However the first 9 amendments inserted the Bill of Rights, effective in 1791. Subsequently, the 13th Amendment as to abolition of slavery was added in 1865, the 14th Amendment as to due process and equal protection of the laws was added in 1868, the 15th Amendment as to the right to vote without regard to race, etc was added in 1870, the 19th Amendment as to the right to vote without regard to sex was added in 1919, the 24th Amendment as to the right to vote irrespective of failure to pay a tax was added in 1964 and the 26th Amendment as to the right to vote of persons over 18 years of age was added in 1971. A copy of these provisions is set out in Appendix 4.

(b) Other proposed amendments, not yet ratified, include those dealing with child labour and as to the equal rights of the sexes.

(c) The USA Constitution emerged during a period of conflict, when the sentiment in favour of provisions designed to secure a measure of freedom was very strong, not only from the former colonial rulers, but also from USA governments of the future. The scenario was very different from that now applying in the Northern Territory. However, the underlying primary rationale is basically the same, in that the purpose of having entrenched rights was and is to secure the fundamental rights of the citizen against undue encroachment by government.

(d) It is said that for the first 150 years of the operation of the USA Bill of Rights, these provisions were given little force and effect by the USA courts. This position has changed in the last 50 years with a more "activist" Supreme Court. This is no doubt a result of a number of factors, including the more pervasive intrusion of contemporary government into virtually all aspects of society and life, the development worldwide of human rights jurisprudence and increasing concerns about the erosion of individual rights.

(e) Considerable controversy has surrounded the role of the USA Supreme Court in interpreting some of the provisions of the Bill of Rights, particularly those concerning rights of free speech and freedom of the press, the right to bear arms, provisions as to search and arrest and freedom of religion. In part, these concerns stem from the particular formulation of some rights considered appropriate over 200 years ago, but now of questionable value. In part, they stem from the entrenched nature of the rights, giving the Supreme Court a wide and virtually unchallengeable discretion (except in a political sense) in matters concerning their interpretation, a matter perhaps not assisted by the manner of appointment of members of the Court. The limited correlation with internationally accepted contemporary standards of human rights means that the Supreme Court has not always drawn great assistance from the developing international human rights jurisprudence. The absence of a provision guiding the courts in balancing the various rights and the lack of any provision indicating that the rights may to some extent be qualified in the wider public interest has limited the degree of flexibility available. Notwithstanding the controversy, the Court enjoys a high reputation.

(f) Arguably, the USA Bill of Rights, while having had a profound affect on constitutional law in that country and while in many cases securing individual rights, has by some standards failed to ensure the kind of tolerant, moderate and open society that might be considered desirable in Australia. While it is difficult to argue by analogy from one country to another, it indicates the limitations of a constitutionally entrenched statement of rights. A Bill of Rights, no matter how carefully drawn, should not be seen as a panacea for all the ills of society. It is but one instrument among many.

(g) All USA State constitutions as distinct from the national Constitution contain a series of protections of specified rights for individuals. Most of the constitutions of the original States contained such provisions and the federal Bill of Rights was to a certain extent patterned on them. Interestingly, the Bills of Rights in State constitutions usually appear at the beginning of the constitutions in question, rather than at the end as in the federal Bill of Rights. This structural difference has been said to be significant. The last two States to be admitted into the Union, Alaska and Hawaii, included a Bill of Rights in their new State constitutions.

(h) These State Bills of Rights were largely ignored until the 1970's when courts started to utilise their provisions in deciding cases. Many of these Bills of Rights contain provisions going further than the federal Bill of Rights. For example, they sometimes protect rights against private intrusion and not just against governments. This has led to somewhat of a rebirth of State constitutional law. It is complicated by the fact that the USA Supreme Court does not have a general appellate jurisdiction in State matters. By way of comparison, the Australian High Court does.

(i) Some USA territories also have a constitutional Bill of Rights of their own, such as the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico (the residents of which recently voted against admission as a new State) and American Samoa.
2. Canada

(a) Initially, the Imperial British North America Act of 1867 had no provisions equivalent to a Bill of Rights. In 1960, Canada adopted a Bill of Rights by ordinary federal legislation, applicable only federally. It has only a limited effect. It provides that every federal law, unless expressly declaring otherwise, is to be interpreted consistently with that Bill of Rights.

(b) In 1982, the British North America Act was patriated to Canada and became the Constitution Act 1982 of Canada. It incorporated a Charter of Rights and Freedoms (The Charter), applicable both at a federal and provincial level, a copy of which is also set out at Appendix 5. It was introduced alongside the statutory Bill of Rights, and presumably overrode that Bill of Rights to the extent of any inconsistency. Two aspects of the Bill of Rights were said to survive, namely, the provision for due process, extending to protection of property, and the guarantee of a fair hearing in the determination of rights and obligations.

(c) The Charter incorporates not only traditional individual human rights, but also mobility rights and language rights. It is an enforceable document. It provides that it does not abrogate or derogate from Aboriginal rights, but subject to the guarantee of equality based on gender. Most of the rights are subject to a right of express exceptions by statute, which can only be operative for a maximum of 5 years. It is subject to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. In other respects, The Charter is constitutionally entrenched, involving a complicated amendment procedure.

(d) The Charter has precipitated a great volume of litigation (mostly concerning criminal matters) and has generated considerable controversy. It has been widely excluded in Quebec by Provincial statutes.

(e) Canadian Provinces have been active in the area of civil liberties longer than the federal Canadian Government. Provincial anti-discrimination legislation has existed for many years. In 1962, Ontario consolidated this into a Human Rights Code, administered by a Human Rights Commission. All Provinces followed suit, and these continue notwithstanding the adoption of The Charter. The Codes have a wider application than The Charter, extending to private individuals and firms in certain cases. The informal procedure under the Codes has no counterpart in The Charter.

(f) A number of Provinces also have statutory Bills of Right, commencing with Saskatchewan in 1947. Quebec adopted one in 1975. These Provincial Bills of Rights have lost most of their importance since the introduction of The Charter, although in some cases they are broader in scope than The Charter.

(g) The Yukon Territory adopted a statutory Human Rights Act in 1987. In the case of the Northwest Territories, the Commission for Constitutional Development for the Northwest Territories of Canada, recommended that the “New Western Territory” should reaffirm the rights and freedoms that are set out in The Charter.

3. New Zealand

(a) The present Bill of Rights found its origins in a Government White Paper of 1985. That Paper followed to some extent the design of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and also of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. In its draft form it incorporated recognition of Maori rights under the Treaty of Waitangi, but this provision has not survived. The Paper proposed that it be enacted as an ordinary Act of Parliament, but with a statement that it was the supreme law of New Zealand such that it overrode any inconsistent law. It was to be entrenched to the extent that any amendment was to require a 75% majority of the members of the Parliament or a majority of electors at a poll.

(b) The New Zealand Bill of Rights Act was subsequently enacted in 1990. It omits any statement as being the supreme law and is not constitutionally entrenched. It operates merely as a statement of preferred interpretation in relation to public legislation and public actions. It cannot override other inconsistent legislation, either expressly or by implication.

(d) Notwithstanding its limitations, it is clear that it constitutes a major break with tradition. There are signs that the New Zealand courts may be prepared to give the Bill some significant practical effect notwithstanding these limitations.

4. Papua New Guinea

(a) Prior to independence, the legislature enacted a Human Rights Ordinance 1971, enforceable as an ordinary statute in the Supreme Court.

(b) The Constitution of independent Papua New Guinea (PNG), proclaimed in 1975, was prepared in a manner that in some ways is similar to that proposed by this Sessional Committee for the Northern Territory. The PNG Constitution evolved from a motion of the House of Assembly to establish a Constitutional Planning Committee in 1972. Its task was to recommend a constitution for full internal self-government with a view to eventual independence. The Committee engaged in widespread public consultation and produced a Final Report in two parts in 1974.

(c) That Final Report advocated a comprehensive constitutional Declaration of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms, preferring such a statement to counter arguments... that this is a matter best left to the legislature and the courts. It was to be constitutionally entrenched, but subject to exceptions reasonably justifiable in a democratic society.

(d) Following receipt of the Final Report, the House of Assembly resolved itself into a Constituent Assembly for the purpose of establishing and adopting the Constitution of Papua New Guinea as part of the transition to independence.

(e) The PNG Constitution contains an enforceable statement of Basic Rights — see Appendix 6 to this Paper. A prohibition on slavery is also contained in section 253.\(^{40}\) The provisions are entrenched and require a special procedure for amendment, involving two separate Parliamentary resolutions at least 2 months apart, and requiring a 2/3rds or 3/4's absolute majority vote, plus publication and opportunities for debate. The suggested qualification as to laws that are reasonably justifiable in a democratic society is preserved for certain qualified rights.

(f) In addition, the PNG Constitution contains a statement of Basic Social Obligations and a statement of National Goals and Directive Principles relating to economic, social and cultural goals for the nation, basically in a non-justiciable form.\(^{41}\) These statements, together with the United Nations Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights — see Appendix 7 — and other international human rights instruments and judgments, reports and opinions thereon and a variety of other source materials, may be taken into account in determining whether or not a matter is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society.\(^{42}\)

(g) These provisions and other related provisions in the PNG Constitution are complicated and lengthy, and it is not clear whether the high principles upon which they are based have been fully translated into practice.

5. United Kingdom

(a) Traditionally, the United Kingdom has not espoused the cause of an entrenched written constitution, relying instead on the principle of the supremacy of Parliament and on ordinary statutes passed by that Parliament and a range of unwritten conventions supplementing the common law which for present purposes includes equitable rules. It is now firmly established that an ordinary statute can override the common law, there being no fundamental natural law principles that are beyond Parliamentary reach. Subject to changes resulting from entry into the European Community, there have been no real developments in the form of a comprehensive constitutional statement of rights since the Bill of Rights in 1688.

(b) It is widely considered that this Century has seen a significant transfer of real power away from the legislature and towards the executive, with an accompanying erosion of Parliamentary authority through the party system. This has lead to concerns in the United Kingdom and elsewhere that the traditional rights and freedoms of the citizen

\(^{40}\) s253 - Slavery, and the slave trade in all their forms, and all similar institutions and practices, are strictly prohibited.

\(^{41}\) see Appendix 6.

\(^{42}\) see Papua New Guinea Constitution, section 39 in Appendix 6. are perhaps no longer protected as much as they should be and that the rights of the citizen have come to depend too much on the exercise of executive discretions. The courts of the common law world have endeavoured to develop that common law to meet this new challenge, particularly in the area of administrative law. However, this approach clearly has its limitations. It has been supplemented by particular legislative reforms from time to time, although instigation of these reforms is now largely dependant on the will of the executive.

(c) There has been a developing view that these traditional rights and freedoms are not sufficient of themselves to protect basic rights. This debate has received some impetus from the entry of the United Kingdom into the European Community, most of the members of which are a party to the European Convention on Human Rights of 1950.
A copy of this Convention is set out at Appendix 8 to this Paper.

(d) That Convention incorporates a detailed statement of rights and establishes the machinery for their enforcement. There is a right for any person or group who claims to be a victim of a violation of the rights by a national contracting party that has recognised the competence of the Commission to petition the European Commission of Human Rights. This right extends to the United Kingdom. The Commission can only deal with the matter after all domestic remedies are exhausted and within a period of 6 months from the final decision. The Commission reports with its recommendations to the Committee of Ministers. There is also a European Court of Human Rights, but only the national contracting parties or the Commission can bring a case before that Court. Its jurisdiction has been accepted by the United Kingdom. The Court can only deal with the matter if the Commission's settlement attempts have not succeeded. The Court can make binding, final decisions. European Community States also have access to the European Court of Justice in human rights and other matters.

(e) In a number of cases originating from the United Kingdom, it has been found that the law or practice of that country does not meet the standards set by the Convention.

(f) United Kingdom courts have not accepted that the Convention is part of the domestic law of that country, and as a result the Convention cannot found a cause of action in those courts. It is clear that the Convention and the decisions under it are having a profound affect on the law of that country.

(g) The Maastricht Treaty of 1992 affirmed the resolve of the members of the European Union to the principles of liberty, democracy and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and of the rule of law. It provides in Article F2 that the Union shall respect fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention of 1950 and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the member states, as general principles of community law.

(h) A number of draft Bills of Rights have been put forward in the United Kingdom, based on the European Convention and designed to give them the force of domestic law.
None have yet come into force.
6. South Africa

(a) As a result of plans for the abolition of apartheid, the Republic of South Africa has had cause to consider the need for an entrenched constitutional Bill of Rights. In the South African Law Commission's Interim Report into Group and Human Rights of 1991, it concluded that the advantages and necessity of such a Bill far outweighed the alleged disadvantages and dangers. It was envisaged that the process of negotiations should go hand in hand with the formulation of such a Bill and the elimination from the statute book of existing inconsistent provisions.

(b) As a consequence, the negotiation of a Bill of Rights became critical to the constitutional settlement that followed.

(c) The new South African Constitution was introduced by an Act in 1993, in force from 1994, and repealing the whole of the previous constitution. It is expressed to be a transitional document, in that it establishes both Houses of Parliament as a Constituent Assembly to draft and adopt a future new constitution. This must conform to the Constitutional Principles in Schedule 4 to the 1993 new South African Constitution — see Appendix 9.

(d) The 1993 new South African Constitution also entrenches a broad statement of enforceable fundamental rights, effective immediately. These may be limited by provisions that are reasonable and justifiable in an open and democratic society based on freedom and equality, and in some cases providing they are necessary. They may also be qualified under certain conditions by a state of emergency and suspension and by a process of interpretation which promotes the values that underlie an open and democratic society based on freedom and equality, having regard to international law and comparable foreign case law. These provisions may only be amended at a joint sitting of both Houses by a 2/3rds absolute majority of the total number of members of both Houses.

(e) No amendment of the Constitutional Principles and the requirement to comply with same is permissible.

(f) The 1993 new South African Constitution provides for the establishment of a Constitutional Court which must certify that a future new constitution does so conform. The Constitutional Principles specify that South Africa is to have a democratic system of government committed to achieving equality between men and women and people of all races. Everyone is to enjoy all universally accepted fundamental rights, freedoms and civil liberties, which are to be protected by entrenched and justiciable provisions in the future new Constitution. These entrenched and justiciable provisions are to be drafted after due consideration to the fundamental rights in the 1993 new South African Constitution. The legal system is to ensure equality of all before the law and an equitable legal process, including laws, programs or activities that have as their object the amelioration of the conditions of the disadvantaged, including those on the grounds of race, colour and gender. There is to be a qualified, independent and impartial judiciary. A variety of other provisions relate to the democratic process.

E. MERITS OR OTHERWISE OF A BILL OF RIGHTS IN A NORTHERN TERRITORY CONSTITUTION

1. There are a variety of arguments that have been advanced for and against a Bill of Rights and these are discussed below. In the end, it is a matter of personal assessment, having regard to these arguments. It is not a matter upon which the Committee has any fixed views at this stage. It is anxious to assess the prevailing feeling in the Territory community on the matter.

2. There is the secondary, but important, question of whether it is appropriate to have a Bill of Rights in a new Northern Territory constitution, irrespective of whether there is a comparable document at either the federal or any of the State levels in Australia. On this point, the Committee refers to the experience in USA and Canada, discussed above, indicating that Bills of Rights are not always confined to the national constitutional levels. In the absence of any national Bill of Rights and any existing firm proposals for a Bill of Rights elsewhere in Australia, the Committee does not see this as a reason why the Territory should not "go-it alone", if this is what is decided as being best for all Territorians. If the object is to ensure that the Territory operates in the future under a free and democratic system of government with a guarantee of equal rights for all Territorians, then there may be good arguments for acting in these circumstances. Any alleged deficiencies in the protection of rights elsewhere in Australia does not provide a reason for not proceeding in the Territory unless the Territory would itself be clearly disadvantaged thereby.

3. A decision on whether the Territory should adopt its own Bill of Rights will in part be influenced by the nature of the rights contained in that Bill and the manner of their enforcement and the degree of entrenchment. No doubt some people would be concerned if the Territory should, contemporaneously with the adoption of a new constitution, thereupon move into a new system of government with a rigidly entrenched and enforceable Bill of Rights, which is very difficult to change later. The consequences of such an action may (to some extent at least) be difficult to predict, with limited opportunities for correction of any mistakes. Other people may be concerned if the Territory was to adopt a statement of rights which was not enforceable by Court at the instigation of the individual, which could be easily changed and which had little influence upon existing or future laws and practices. This may be seen as too weak. There is also likely to be debate over particular categories of rights, and whether they should be included in a Bill of Rights, for example, as to the rights of unborn children as against the rights of women. A decision either way may affect some peoples' attitudes to the whole Bill of Rights.

4. The possible content of a Northern Territory Bill of Rights is dealt with in Item F below, the possible methods of enforcement of a Northern Territory Bill of Rights are dealt with in Item G below, whilst possible forms of entrenchment are also dealt with in Item G below.
5. Putting these three issues aside for the moment, it is possible to briefly summarise the main arguments for and against a Bill of Rights. The arguments for and against include:

(a) Parliamentary supremacy and the relationship with the judiciary

(i) One of the main arguments against an entrenched Bill of Rights is that the democratically elected Parliament, chosen by and representing the people, should make any decisions on the matter of rights, and not be fettered by constitutional restraints of a rights nature on the scope of the Parliament's legislative power. The opposite of this argument is that fundamental rights are not adequately protected by a vote in Parliament and should be guaranteed by the constitution.

(ii) Under prevailing English constitutional theory, Parliament is said to be supreme and can make any law it chooses in respect of the particular jurisdiction which it represents. This theory is mitigated in many countries by the forces of constitutionalism; that is, where there is a written, entrenched constitution which incorporates limitations on what would otherwise be regarded as a supreme form of legislative power. But subject to those restraints, the view is often taken that ultimate power in a democratic system should be vested in the elected representatives of the people through the Parliament.

(iii) The fact is that most countries of the World now have written constitutions, and the greater majority of these contain statements of rights. Australia is one of the few countries that has a written constitution without a comprehensive statement of rights. Nevertheless, the Australian Constitution already contains a number of significant restraints on the federal Parliament's grant of legislative power, some of which relate to the federal system, others of which relate to democratic and other rights, either expressed or implied. They are already enforced by the courts. In this sense, a comprehensive Bill of Rights, if inserted into the Australian Constitution, would only be an extension of the constitutional restraints that already exist, although depending on the content of the Bill of Rights, it could be a considerable extension.

44 Provisions for the federal Parliament to be directly elected by the people (ss7 and 24).
. The right to vote (s41).
. Freedom from compulsory acquisition of property under Commonwealth laws otherwise than on just terms, s51(xxxi).
. Security of tenure for federal Judges (s72).
. Trial by jury for Commonwealth indictable offences (s80).
. No discrimination or preferences among the States in trade, commerce, and revenue (ss51(ii), (iii), 88, 90, 92, 99).
. Freedom of religion at the federal level (s116).
. No disability or discrimination between residents of different States (s117).
. No alteration of the Constitution without a national referendum of voters (s128).
The Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory at present is similarly restrained by certain provisions in the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978, by the subordinate nature of that legislature to the federal Parliament and Government, and to some extent by the Australian Constitution. Again, there is no comprehensive Bill of Rights applicable to the Northern Territory, but the adoption of such a Bill in an entrenched form would only be an extension of these present restraints.

The practical operation of the theory of the supremacy of Parliament has to accommodate the doctrine of the separation of powers between the legislature, the executive and the judiciary. This doctrine postulates that each of these three arms will confine itself to a particular type of governmental function and will not encroach unduly on the others. The tension between them contributes to the checks and balances in the overall system of government and itself is said to guarantee a measure of freedom and democracy. This doctrine has never been fully applied in the Australian federal sphere, and does not apply at all at a State level. However, there remains a strong attachment to the notion that there should be an independent judiciary to check on the excesses of the legislature and the executive by way of judicial rulings in particular cases, particularly within the framework of a written constitution.

The practical operation of the theory of the supremacy of Parliament has also been undermined in recent times by the great extension of the powers of executive government, a process assisted by the two-party system and other factors. This has been associated with the great expansion in the range of functions performed by governments. It is also a fact that substantial control can be exercised by the executive government over the legislative program in a Westminster type of system. This capacity is usually greater in a unicameral system. While significant elements of accountability of the executive government to the legislature remain in such a system, it is now not uncommon for concerns to be expressed about the excessive width of the powers and discretions now exercised by executive governments, largely free of legal restraint and oversight. The potential for the abuse of power and the infringement of rights and freedoms has become apparent, as indicated by a number of recent cases involving high officials.

It is not surprising in such a scenario that there should be increasing support for entrenched statements of certain minimum standards in the form of an enforceable Bill of Rights.

Such a Bill of Rights would obviously result in a change in the balance of power between the legislature (and also the executive) on the one hand, and the judiciary on the other hand. This is because it would be the judiciary that would have to interpret and apply the Bill of Rights in particular cases. The concern often expressed is that the Judges are not elected and are not well equipped to deal with broad policy issues, are not accountable in the same way as politicians, and should not have the ability to make decisions binding on the other two arms of government on such generalised issues as fundamental rights. It is sometimes viewed as being anti-democratic.

(ix) A response to this view was provided by His Honour Justice Toohey in his address to the 1992 Darwin conference on Constitutional Change in the 1990s.\(^45\) In that paper, he asserted that judicial review under a written constitution is not anti-democratic, but in fact an essential element in the maintenance of democracy and the rule of law. Majoritarianism through elected representatives may not necessarily equate with democracy. The entrenchment of fundamental principles, enforced by an independent judiciary, does not, in his view, entirely prevent the destruction or diminution of a society's liberal-democratic character, but it can place hurdles in the path of regressive change and provide a means both of protection against misuse of legislative and executive power and in the promotion of fundamental rights and freedoms.

(x) The public debate following that address has tended to concentrate on the development by the High Court of implied constitutional rights, a matter of considerable controversy based on their alleged arbitrary nature. This is a separate matter from the question of the adoption of a written statement of rights. A question of judicial discretion remains in the latter case, but that discretion is not as uncontrolled as it may be for implied rights. The degree of judicial discretion in interpreting an express statement of rights may be reduced over time with the developing national and international human rights jurisprudence in any event and the consequent build up of case precedents.

(xi) The Committee is anxious to ascertain the strength of feeling in the Northern Territory in support of an enforceable Bill of Rights in a new Territory constitution, or whether it is felt that the safeguards provided through the common law, plus a single chamber Parliament and its elected members, the Parliament being vested with very wide powers largely free of express constitutional restraints as to fundamental rights, is sufficient to continue to guarantee the rights and freedoms we have inherited in the Territory.

(b) Politicisation of the judiciary

(i) It is argued that because of the generalised nature of statements of rights, which if given enforceable constitutional status can result in a shift in power to the courts in matters of their interpretation and application, there is much greater potential for the courts to become involved in policy and political issues than previously. This in turn might impair the standing of courts and their reputation for impartiality. An enforceable Bill of Rights would increase the potential for the court to be drawn into political controversy. It might also lead to more controversy over judicial appointments.

(ii) In contrast to this view is the school of thought that says that all judicial acts are, to some extent at least, value laden, and that it is quite appropriate for courts within proper judicial limits to be involved in making value judgments in applying the law to particular cases, providing they have proper regard to legal precedents and that their decisions are based on published, reasoned arguments.

(iii) There are indications that the High Court in particular has in recent times come under more public scrutiny because of the controversial nature of some of its decisions. The former Chief Justice has rejected the view that the work of the Court should be confined to non-controversial issues or that it should not be subject to public scrutiny.

(c) Workload

A concern often expressed is whether the courts would be able to deal adequately with the increased workload resulting from an entrenched Bill of Rights. This might be a particular concern with the High Court if there was a federal Bill of Rights, given its present heavy load. In the case of an entrenched Northern Territory Bill of Rights, there would also be an increase in the workload for the Northern Territory Supreme Court, but the exact extent of this increase is difficult to quantify. This would include some increase in appellate work in that Court.

(d) Entrenched values

(i) Because Bills of Rights are heavily based on contemporary values, there is a concern that entrenchment may result in the adoption of values which may change with time, but which will continue unchanged in the law. The common example cited is the USA right to keep and bear arms.

(ii) To some extent this question can be addressed by provisions for review or constitutional change. However, too much flexibility defeats the arguments in favour of constitutional entrenchment. In addition, changing interpretations by the courts can to some extent also accommodate widely accepted changes in values. Some flexibility may be achieved by giving courts, in interpreting a particular statement of rights, the capacity to have regard to the developing human rights jurisprudence in comparable jurisdictions for this purpose.

(e) Access to courts

It might be argued that the insertion of a Bill of Rights in a Northern Territory constitution could be counter productive, to the extent that only those persons who can afford access to the courts will be able to derive any benefit. There are, however, methods of minimising any such limitations on access. In any event, it is an argument that assumes that only those parties to a case before the Courts involving the Bill of Rights will benefit, whereas clearly the affect of a binding judicial determination can have considerable consequences for the community at large.

(f) Community standards

Arguably, the adoption of a Bill of Rights can have an educative effect on the community by making people more aware of both their rights and the rights of others, and may encourage their promotion and the improvement of community standards generally. The opposite view is that it may tend to promote minority or sectarian views or encourage what might be thought to be undesirable attitudes or conduct. This is a controversial matter, upon which the Committee expresses no opinion at this time, but would welcome submissions.

(g) Protection of the disadvantaged and minorities

(i) One of the principle arguments for a Bill of Rights is that in a majoritarian democracy, the rights of smaller groups can sometimes fail to receive the attention they deserve and in fact they may sometimes be discriminated against by weight of decisions favouring the majority. On one view, this might be considered to be an acceptable result in that it tends to preserve the majority position and the social, religious, political and cultural values on which that majority position is based. However it has to be asked whether this is a legitimate form of justification in a diverse and multicultural Northern Territory community. The recent experiences of violence overseas, in so far as they have resulted from the inability of majorities to accept a proper role for minorities, must be considered in this context.

(ii) The extent to which this issue is presently a concern in the Northern Territory, other than perhaps for Aboriginal Territorians — a matter for separate consideration by the Committee — is difficult to assess. The Committee would welcome comments from all sections of the Territory community.

(h) The Need for a Northern Territory Bill of Rights

(i) On one view, there is no real need for a Bill of Rights in the Northern Territory, on the assumption that the Northern Territory is already a free and tolerant society. Arguably, the rights of Territorians are already adequately protected by the legislation of both the federal and Territory Parliaments, supplementing the common law, and by the democratic forces operating on and within society generally on politicians, administrators and law enforcement officers in observing proper limits.

(ii) The difficulty with this argument is that it fails to take into account, not only any current deficiencies in law and administration, (even if few in number), but more importantly, the possibility of future aberrant action by law-makers or in matters of administration, unchecked by any (or few) constitutional limitations on government setting minimum standards of a fundamental nature.

(i) Conclusion

(i) The Committee has not yet decided to adopt any of these arguments, or any other arguments for that matter, either for or against a Bill of Rights in the Northern Territory. It would welcome public comment and discussion on any arguments of relevance either way. A Bill of Rights, at least in a firmly entrenched form, would be likely to result in considerable changes in Territory law and practice. Much more emphasis would be placed on the courts in the protection of rights, and much would depend upon the response of the courts, and the capacity of the Judges to effectively interpret and apply the Bill of Rights. The resultant limitations on the capacity of the legislature and the Government to carry out their respective tasks must be taken into account. The need for flexibility for the Territory to respond appropriately to the rapidly changing national and international scene is of no small importance in this regard. But so is the need to retain the fundamental values of our system of government, not to be lightly thrown away in the pursuit of some transient objective or under the political pressures of the moment. It is ultimately a question of getting the right balance.

(ii) The Committee suggests that careful thought must be given to the other three issues already mentioned before a decision on the merits is taken — these three matters are the nature of the rights to be included, the manner of their enforcement and the degree of entrenchment. These are discussed in Items (F) and (G) below.

F. POSSIBLE CONTENT OF A NORTHERN TERRITORY BILL OF RIGHTS

1. Introduction

(a) In very broad terms, there are said to be three groups of rights:47

(i) political and civil rights -

Political rights are those that relate to an individual’s right of active participation in society and government. Civil rights are those that relate to an individual’s right to protection and freedom.

(ii) economic and social rights -

These rights relate to basic economic independence, including an individual’s right to work and receive equal pay for equal work, and an individual’s right to an adequate standard of living and freedom of family structure.

(iii) community and cultural rights -

These rights may be exercised individually or in community with others and include cultural and artistic rights, environmental rights and rights that relate to indigenous peoples.

There is no fixed concept of rights, although internationally accepted statements of minimum standards of certain fundamental rights provide a guide.48 There is much controversy in the community about the content and scope of rights and the relationship between different rights.

Notwithstanding the confusion and the debate in this area, a survey of various national constitutions indicates that the type of rights most commonly given constitutional status are those in the first group, namely political and civil rights. These rights are designed to secure certain basic individual rights and freedoms in an open and democratic society and are more likely to be amenable to judicial methods of enforcement. They are particularly directed at securing these rights and freedoms against undue encroachment by government. They encompass the rights to freedom of speech and public debate, freedom to hold and practice a religion or belief, freedom from arbitrary search, arrest or imprisonment and other matters, commonly taken for granted in Australia but not necessarily fully protected by Australian law. It is difficult to conceive of how a Bill of Rights could be adopted within Australia if it did not, to some extent at least, incorporate that group of rights.

If a Bill of Rights is to be included at all in a new Northern Territory constitution, then arguably what might be considered to be the most fundamental of these civil and political rights should be included in that Bill of Rights in so far as they are relevant in the position of the Northern Territory. Some examples of particular categories of civil and political rights that might be so included are discussed below.

There is a question whether a Bill of Rights in a new Northern Territory constitution should go further. In this respect, the Committee has discussed elsewhere the matter of entrenchment of Aboriginal rights including as to self determination.49 The other rights in groups — paragraph 1(a) (ii) and (iii) above could be considered for inclusion, although the case for their inclusion is generally much less compelling. The onus is on those who would assert that any of these other rights should be included to clearly demonstrate that their inclusion is necessary or desirable, that their inclusion would be likely to achieve the desired outcomes, that they would be likely to receive community acceptance and that they would not unduly limit the possibility of detailed political solutions in the future implemented where necessary by specific legislation and tailored to meet the particular needs of the Territory at that time.

(f) One view is that a Northern Territory Bill of Rights, if one is to be adopted, should not go beyond the most fundamental of those civil and political rights that are generally accepted throughout the world. This would avoid creating the impression that it is able to provide the solutions to a wide range of community, social and economic concerns by a simple constitutional statement. It would, to some extent at least, also avoid the incorporation of particular rights subject to considerable controversy. To do otherwise may condemn the whole exercise to failure from the start. It may be considered to be more important initially to establish certain minimum standards in matters of clear fundamental importance in a free and democratic society. Other matters might be considered later by way of amendment.

(g) The following is a discussion of those heads of civil and political rights to be found in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR)\textsuperscript{50} that could possibly be of relevance to a Northern Territory Bill of Rights. These are not exhaustive of the rights that could be considered for inclusion. Some rights are not discussed because they are primarily a Commonwealth responsibility — for example marriage. The Committee welcomes comments and suggestions on these and any other rights considered appropriate to the Northern Territory.

2. Right to Life

(a) The ICCPR provides in Article 6.1 that every human being has the inherent right to life, to be protected by law, and that no one is to be arbitrarily deprived of life.\textsuperscript{51}

(b) In broad terms the right to life is already recognised in particular ways in the common law as supplemented by legislation. Various rights and remedies exist in that law designed around the upholding of this principle, although the principle itself is not part of the law. As pointed out in the Issues Paper of the ACT Attorney-General's Department on a Bill of Rights for the ACT most of the debate is concerned with particular issues at the boundaries of life, such as abortion, the use of reproductive technology, euthanasia and capital punishment. It is not appropriate in this Paper to enter into a detailed discussion of these particular issues, although readers are referred to the helpful discussion in that Issues Paper and in the Queensland Electoral and Administrative Review Commission Report.

55 Sections 172-174:

s172. PROCURING ABORTION

Subject to section 174, any person who, with the intention of procuring the miscarriage of a woman or girl, whether or not the woman or girl is pregnant, administers to her, or causes to be taken by her, a poison or other noxious thing, or uses an instrument or other means is guilty of a crime and is liable to imprisonment for 7 years.

s173. SUPPLYING DRUGS, & c., TO CAUSE ABORTION

Subject to section 174, any person who unlawfully supplies or obtains a poison or other noxious thing, or instrument or other thing, knowing that it is intended to be used or employed with the intention of procuring the miscarriage of a woman or girl, whether or not the woman or girl is pregnant, is guilty of a crime and is liable to imprisonment for 7 years.

s174. MEDICAL TERMINATION OF PREGNANCY

(1) It is lawful -

(a) for a medical practitioner who is a gynaecologist or obstetrician to give medical treatment with the intention of procuring the miscarriage of a woman or girl who, he has reasonable cause to believe after medically examining her, has been pregnant for not more than 14 weeks if the medical treatment is given in hospital and the medical practitioner and another medical practitioner are of the opinion, formed in good faith after medical examination of the woman or girl by them, that -

(i) the continuance of the pregnancy would involve greater risk to her life or greater risk of injury to her physical or mental health than if the pregnancy were terminated; or

(ii) there is a substantial risk that, if the pregnancy were not terminated and the child were to be born, the child would have or suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped;

(b) for a medical practitioner to give medical treatment with the intention of procuring the miscarriage of a woman or girl who, he has reasonable cause to believe after medically examining her, has been pregnant for not more than 23 weeks if the medical practitioner is of the opinion, formed in good faith after his medical examination of her, that termination of the pregnancy is immediately necessary to prevent grave injury to her physical or mental health; or

(c) for a medical practitioner to give medical treatment with the intention of procuring the miscarriage of a woman or girl if the treatment is given in good faith for the purpose only of preserving her life.

(2) No person is under a duty, whether by contract or otherwise, to procure or to assist in procuring the miscarriage of a woman or girl or to dispose of or to assist in disposing of an aborted foetus if he has a conscientious objection thereto, but, in any legal proceedings, the burden of proving such a conscientious objection shall rest upon the person claiming to have it.

(3) Nothing in this section relieves a medical practitioner from his liability, in carrying out medical treatment or performing an operation with the intention of procuring the miscarriage of a woman or girl, to carry out or perform it -

(a) if the consent of a person is required by law to the carrying out of the medical treatment or the performance of the operation - with that consent;

(b) with professional care; and life sustaining measures, see the Northern Territory Natural Death Act of 1988. As to capital punishment, see the Death Penalty Abolition Act 1973 of the Commonwealth. Capital punishment does not currently exist in the Northern Territory as a lawful penalty.

(d) A guarantee in a Northern Territory Bill of Rights of a right to life may not alter the law in respect of the particular issues in the last subparagraph. Thus, for example, the inherent right to life in Article 6 of the ICCPR also provides that no one is to be arbitrarily deprived of life. Capital punishment, if authorised by law, is still contemplated as a possibility in that Article on certain conditions.

3. Torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

(a) The ICCPR provides in Article 7 that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman, degrading treatment or punishment, including medical or scientific experimentation without the person's free consent.

(b) The legal position on the matter of torture in Australia is covered by the Crimes (Torture) Act 1988 of the Commonwealth. However there is no constitutional guarantee against torture and no prohibition of other forms of treatment or punishment which might not constitute torture, but which might otherwise be cruel, inhuman or degrading.

(c) It might be thought that any such guarantee in a new Northern Territory constitution could conflict with certain forms of traditional Aboriginal punishment, such as spearing. At the moment, it is clear that the law in the Northern Territory does not recognise the legality of such forms of punishment, although the courts may take into account the fact of Aboriginal traditional punishments. The Committee has addressed this matter and has expressed the view that if Aboriginal customary law is to be recognised as a source of law in the Northern Territory, there would be merit in a provision that it should only be such a source in so far as that law is consistent with international human rights norms.

(c) otherwise according to law.

(4) A medical practitioner shall be deemed to have met his liability under subsection (3)(a) in carrying out the medical treatment or performing the operation if he carries it out or performs it -

(a) except where the woman or girl is incapable in law (otherwise than by being an infant) of giving the consent - with the consent of the woman or girl; and

(b) if the girl is under the age of 16 years or is otherwise incapable in law of giving the consent - with the consent of each person having authority in law, apart from this subjection, to give the consent.

"3. General Constitutional Recognition

Should there be any exceptions

(d) The Committee refers to the first of the five factors mentioned in paragraph (b), that is, whether there should be any exceptions to the types of customary law to be recognised. In this regard, the diversity and
4. Slavery

(a) The ICCPR, in Article 8, prohibits slavery and all forms of slave trade. No one is to be held in servitude. With specified exceptions, no one may be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.

(b) Although Australia is a party to various international agreements on slavery, there is no Australian legislation specifically prohibiting same. The power of the federal Parliament to make laws relating to various welfare benefits is expressly stated not to authorise any form of civil conscription in dental and medical services, but otherwise there are no constitutional guarantees. The Northern Territory Criminal Code makes it an offence to deprive someone of their liberty against their will.

The complexity of Aboriginal customary law has already been noted in this paper. Also noted is the fact that it is based on ideas and concepts radically different from "Western" ideas and concepts. The tendency to judge whether certain aspects of customary law are appropriate for recognition in the wider legal system, viewed from the perspective of a different cultural and legal background, has to be kept in mind to avoid any prejudicial judgment. On the other hand, there are an emerging set of international standards by which to judge the validity of any law, standards which are increasingly transcending particular cultural or legal derivations. These standards are becoming evident in the developing jurisprudence of human rights.

(c) In most cases, there will be no clash between indigenous customary law and these wider international standards. This is in part because the relevant international instruments give some prominence to cultural and indigenous rights. This is recognised, for example, in Article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, guaranteeing to members of ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities the right, in community with other members, to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practice their own religion, and to use their own language.

(f) However, all such indigenous rights have to balance against other fundamental rights and to any reasonable restrictions arising therefrom. There may be isolated examples where insistence upon the full application of existing indigenous rights under customary law could lead to an infringement of individual human rights. For example, certain forms of traditional punishment, such as spearing, may be seen as offending against the individual’s right not to be subject to "cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" (ICCPR, Article 7).

(g) These are very difficult issues, involving contemporary notions and values. It is a matter discussed in the Australian Law Reform Commission's Report, Vol I at paragraphs 179-193, where the Commission, while accepting a need for adherence to international human rights norms, stressed the need to determine the application of those norms in the context of the particular society and not in the abstract or by reference to "western" expectations.

(h) Subject to this last-mentioned consideration, the Committee sees merit in a provision that would only recognise customary law as a source of law (if in fact it is to be so recognised) in so far as that law was consistent with international human rights norms or, as expressed in Papua New Guinea, the general principles of humanity (see also ILO Convention No 169, discussed in Item C.4 above). The inter-relationship between the two would of course be a matter to be worked out by the appropriate judicial institutions.

59 s51 (xxiiiA) - The provision of maternity allowances, widows' pensions, child endowment, unemployment, pharmaceutical, sickness and hospital benefits, medical and dental services (but not so as to authorize any form of civil conscription), benefits to students and family allowances.

60 s196 - DEPRIVATION OF LIBERTY:

(1) Any person who confines or detains another in any place against his will, or otherwise deprives another of his personal liberty, is guilty of a crime and is liable to imprisonment for 7 years.
There would not seem to be strong objections to a general prohibition on slavery, servitude and forced labour, providing there are appropriate exceptions such as contained in Article 8 of the ICCPR.

5. Rights to Liberty and Security of Person

(a) The ICCPR states in Article 9 that everyone has the right to liberty and security of the person. No one is to be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention. Any deprivation of liberty is to be on such grounds and in accordance with such procedure as is established by law. An arrested person is to be informed, at the time of arrest, of the reasons for arrest and to be promptly informed of any charges. In addition that person is to be promptly brought before a judicial officer and to be entitled to a trial within a reasonable time. There can be no presumption of detention. There must be a right of judicial review as to the lawfulness of detention and an enforceable right to compensation for unlawful arrest or detention.\(^61\)

(b) The framing of such a right concerning detention must take into account both the legitimate interests of society in protecting itself from individuals whose conduct deserves approbation and necessitates restraining action, and the right of the individual to fair treatment and liberty, which cannot be arbitrarily interfered with.

(c) Relevant Northern Territory provisions are contained in Part VII of the Police Administration Act, and in the Bail Act. Arguably, these provisions would comply with Article 9 of the ICCPR. These are supplementary to the common law, such as for example, the rule that although there is no common law right to a speedy trial, undue delay is a factor that can be taken into account in deciding whether there has been a fair trial.\(^62\) Wrongful arrest or detention can give rise to a prerogative remedy for release (habeas corpus) and a right to damages at common law.

(d) These Northern Territory provisions may be compared with the relevant Commonwealth provisions in the Crimes Act 1914, Part 1A. These have now been supplemented by the provisions of Part 1C of that Act, introduced by the Crimes (Investigation and Commonwealth Offences) Amendment Act 1991, and which impose what might be considered to be a more vigorous procedural regime for dealing with offenders against Commonwealth offences than those for Northern Territory offences.

\(^{62}\) Jago v District Court (NSW) (1989) 168 CLR 23.
While it is a matter for debate as to whether the new Commonwealth provisions go beyond what is reasonably practicable in a vast area such as the Northern Territory, with its associated difficulties of policing and communication, there is an issue whether there should be a specified minimum standard to be observed for the arrest and detention of all persons. It is clear that adequate legal protection from arbitrary arrest and detention is a hallmark of a free society, and arguably a minimum standard in these matters deserves constitutional protection such that that standard cannot be derogated from in any circumstances in the future.

6. Rights of Detainees

(a) The ICCPR in Article 10 provides that all detained persons are to be treated with humanity and respect for their inherent dignity. Accused persons are to be separated from convicted persons except in exceptional circumstances. Accused and convicted juvenile persons are to be separated from adults, their case adjudicated as speedily as possible and they are to be accorded treatment appropriate to their age and legal status. The penitentiary system is to aim at reformation and social rehabilitation.

(b) In addition, the United Nations has issued the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (1955) and the Body of Principles for the Protection of all persons under any form of Detention or Imprisonment (1988).

(c) In the Northern Territory, detention of prisoners is dealt with in the Prisons (Correctional Services) Act. There is no general law guarantee of humane treatment of detained persons, except in so far as the conduct in question may give rise to a common law cause of action in tort or may constitute a criminal offence. Convicted prisoners not yet sentenced and prisoners on remand are to be kept apart from prisoners under sentence unless the Northern Territory Minister otherwise directs.

(d) The arrest and detention of juveniles (under 17 years of age) is dealt with in the Juvenile Justice Act. They are to be held in approved detention centres and persons cannot be admitted to those centres except in accordance with that Act. In other circumstances, juveniles are to be kept apart from other persons under detention as far as practicable.

63 see also Papua New Guinea Constitution, s37 (17), (18), (19), (20), Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, section 10.
64 s10 (5) - In a prison, convicted prisoners not yet sentenced and prisoners on remand shall be kept separate and apart from prisoners under sentence, unless the Minister otherwise directs.
65 s63 - A person shall not be admitted to a detention centre except in accordance with this Act.
66 s32(5) -

1. Subject to this section, a juvenile who has been charged with an offence and is not admitted to bail shall, as soon as practicable, be taken to a detention centre or other place approved by the Minister for the purpose, and shall be detained there on an order to that effect having been made by the Court or a magistrate.

2. A member of the Police Force may make an application for an order under subsection (1) in person or, if it is not practicable for an application to be made in person, it may be made by telephone to a magistrate.

2. Where a juvenile referred to in subsection (1) requires medical attention, instead of being taken to a detention centre or other place referred to in that subsection he may be taken to a hospital within the meaning of
(e) There may be practical difficulties in a place like the Northern Territory to ensure the complete separation of accused persons from convicted persons and juveniles from adults in all circumstances. Thus any right to separate detention should be expressed to be a qualified right.

7. Imprisonment for Contractual default

(a) The ICCPR in Article 11 prohibits imprisonment merely on the ground of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation.

(b) This is not a provision usually found in Bills of Rights. The nearest equivalent is in section 42 (1)(c) of the Papua New Guinea Constitution. It prevents imprisonment for civil debt except where there are other relevant factors involved.

(c) In the Northern Territory, the Local Court Act enables a summons to issue for examination of a judgment debtor. If the debtor does not attend the examination hearing, the court may issue an arrest warrant to bring the debtor before the court. An instalment order operates as a stay of the arrest warrant while it is complied with. Failure to comply with the order constitutes contempt of the court. It seems these provisions would not breach Article 11.

8. Freedom of Movement

(a) The ICCPR in Article 12 guarantees to a person lawfully within a territory, liberty of movement within the national state and freedom to choose a residence. It also deals with freedom to leave any country, and a prohibition on arbitrarily being deprived of the right to enter the country of nationality. The latter rights are not directly 67 s33 - (1) Where a juvenile has been charged with an offence and has not been released from custody, he shall be brought before the Court as soon as practicable and in any case within 7 days after the arrest.

(2) Where a juvenile referred to in subsection (1) is not brought before the Court in accordance with that subsection, he shall immediately be released from custody.

68 s42 (1)(c) -

(c) by reason of his failure to comply with the order of a court made to secure the fulfilment of an obligation (other than a contractual obligation) imposed upon him by law.

relevant in the context of a Northern Territory constitution. The right is implied in the USA Constitution.

(b) Within Australia, there is a guarantee of absolute freedom of intercourse between States and with mainland territories. However there is no such guarantee purely within the Northern Territory. In fact, the federal Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act and the Aboriginal Land Act (NT) require a permit for movement over Aboriginal land under the former Act or on some public roads within Aboriginal land, with limited exceptions.

c) There is no constitutional guarantee of a right of residence in the Northern Territory.

d) It is not likely that any constitutional guarantee of movement and residence within the Northern Territory would be interpreted as being capable of overriding any existing proprietary rights, including presumably those in respect of Aboriginal land. Any review of the permit system on Aboriginal land would need to be undertaken in the context of the issues concerning Aboriginal people and the possible entrenchment of their rights. This will not be considered in this Discussion Paper as it is an issue of specific relevance to Aboriginal people, dealt with elsewhere.

9. Right to a Fair Trial

(a) The ICCPR, in Article 14, sets out a range of minimum standards required to be observed in the criminal process against an individual. These may be summarised as follows:

(i) All persons to be equal before courts and tribunals;

(ii) All persons entitled to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law, but the press and public may be excluded on grounds of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, or where in the interests of the private lives of the parties, or where strictly necessary in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice;

(iii) The judgment is to be given publicly except where the interests of a juvenile otherwise require it or where it concerns a matrimonial dispute or guardianship of children;

(iv) The person charged is to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law;

70 a) Australian Constitution, s92 - On the imposition of uniform duties of customs, trade, commerce, and intercourse among the States, whether by means of internal carriage or ocean navigation, shall be absolutely free.

(v) In determining a criminal charge, the person is to be informed of the charge in a language the person understands, to be given adequate time and facilities to prepare a defence and to communicate with own counsel, to be tried without undue delay, to be tried in the person's presence and to mount his/her own defence or through legal assistance of his or her own choosing, to be informed of his or her right to legal assistance, to have legal assistance assigned if justice so requires and without payment if without sufficient means, to examine and cross examine witnesses and require their attendance, to have the free assistance of an interpreter where necessary and not to be compelled to testify against himself or herself or to confess guilt;

(vi) In case of juveniles, the procedure is to take into account the age and the desirability of promoting rehabilitation;

(vii) There is to be a right to have any conviction and sentence reviewed by a higher tribunal;

(viii) There is to be a right to compensation if the conviction is subsequently reversed or he or she has been pardoned where new facts are conclusive of a miscarriage of justice;

(ix) The person is not to be tried or punished again for the same offence where already finally convicted or acquitted.\textsuperscript{72}

(b) In the Northern Territory, some of the provisions in \textit{Article 14} are reflected in Territory statute law — for example, in the \textit{Justices Act}, the \textit{Criminal Code}, the \textit{Juvenile Justice Act} and the \textit{Legal Aid Act}. More commonly, it is necessary to refer to the common law. In a number of ways, the common law incorporates guarantees equivalent to the Article, although there remains a few of the rights in the Article not protected by the common law. Thus for example there is no right to legal counsel at public expense, although the failure to grant an adjournment to enable the accused to obtain legal representation may, in appropriate cases, be grounds for staying the proceedings on the basis that it will result in an unfair trial.\textsuperscript{73}

(c) It is clear that a right to a fair trial is fundamental to the system of criminal justice that has been inherited in Australia. Such a right is part of the common law in a general sense, although the incidents of that common law right may not in all respects correspond with the provisions of \textit{Article 14}. There is also the possibility that the common law might have been modified by statute or could be so modified in the future.

(d) Provisions for a fair trial are common in statements of rights. It is difficult to conceive of any Bill of Rights for the Northern Territory without such provisions. Assuming there is to be a Bill of Rights in a Northern Territory Constitution, the question becomes one of the extent to which the detail as to fair trials is to be incorporated therein. Any such detail should take into account any special features of the Northern Territory criminal justice system and the difficulties encountered in administering that system. It should also have regard to any indigenous Aboriginal demands for modifications to that system.

(e) Such a consideration may also need to take into account the need for other guarantees not in Article 14, such as trial by jury.

(f) Detailed discussion of all these matters would be very lengthy and is beyond the scope of this Paper. Reference can, however, be made to the Report of the Queensland Electoral and Administrative Review Commission.

10. Retrospective offences/penalties

(a) The ICCPR, in Article 15, deals separately with this matter. It provides that no one is to be held guilty of criminal offence that did not exist at law when committed. Nor can a penalty be imposed that is heavier than that in force at the time when the offence was committed. However, if the penalty is later lightened, the offender shall benefit.

(b) In Australia, this position is governed by the common law. There may be no common law or constitutional prohibition on retrospective criminal offences per se. Ex post facto criminal laws have been held to offend against the USA Constitution.

(c) The Queensland Electoral and Administrative Review Commission Report considered that it was clearly unfair and unjust to make criminal laws with retrospective effect, and recommended a Bill of Rights provision against it.

11. Right to Privacy

(a) The ICCPR provides in Article 17 that no one is to be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his honour and reputation, and that everyone has a right to the protection of the law against same.

(b) In Australia, there is no general right of privacy at common law or under statute, although reference should be made to the Privacy Act 1988 of the Commonwealth. A great variety of laws, either common law, equity or statute, bear upon particular aspects of privacy protection, for example, the Defamation Act of the Northern Territory.

c) The desirability of protecting personal privacy has to be balanced against the wider interests of the public generally. For example in the Police Administration Act, there are powers of entering onto premises by police in order to search where there are grounds to believe that an offence is being committed or that evidence of an offence exists on those premises or that an officer is on those premises.

12. Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

(a) Freedom of thought, conscience and religion is guaranteed by Article 18 of the ICCPR. This includes freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief, to manifest that religion or belief, in worship, observance, practice and teaching. This freedom is only to be subject to limitations as prescribed by law and necessary to protect public safety, order, health, morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others. It includes the liberty of parents/legal guardians to ensure the religious and moral education of their children.\(^80\)

(b) It has been said by the High Court that freedom of religion, the paradigm freedom of conscience, is of the essence of a free society.\(^81\) Notwithstanding this, it has been held that there is no common law guarantee of freedom of religion and belief.\(^82\) There is a limited guarantee in section 116 of the Australian Constitution, applicable only to the Commonwealth and probably extending to Commonwealth territories. The concept of 'religion' has been given a wide meaning by the High Court, but the guarantee itself has been given a narrow meaning.

c) The Committee has already received submissions that these should be a guarantee of freedom of religion and belief in a new Northern Territory constitution.

d) Undoubtedly any constitutional guarantee of freedom of religion and belief would be of relevance to Aboriginal people pursuing traditional patterns of life. For example, there is the question of Aboriginal sacred sites. The Committee in its Discussion Paper suggested that it would be preferable that any constitutional recognition of Aboriginal language, social, cultural and religious customs and practices should be in a form acceptable to the broader community and compatible with the Territory's multi-racial, multi-cultural nature and the principles of equality and non-discrimination.\textsuperscript{83} The Committee also expressed its tentative view against any guarantee of religion applicable to Aboriginal religion only. If there was to be a guarantee, it should apply to all religions equally.\textsuperscript{84}

(e) The guarantee in section 116 of the Australian Constitution has been held not to exclude state aid to private schools.\textsuperscript{85} A narrow approach to this section has so far been taken by the High Court compared to the approach of the USA Supreme Court based on a similar constitutional provision. A new guarantee in wider terms in a Northern Territory constitution would need to consider whether the position as to state aid is to be expressly maintained.

13. \textit{Freedom of Expression}

(a) The ICCPR, in \textit{Article 19}, gives everyone the right to hold opinions without interference. There is also a right to freedom of expression, including the right to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds in any medium of choice, but subject to such restrictions provided by law as are necessary for respect for the rights or reputations of others, for the protection of national security or public order or of public health or morals.\textsuperscript{86}

(b) Freedom of expression (sometimes called freedom of speech) is another principle that is usually regarded as one of the fundamentals of individual human rights. As \textit{Article 19} contemplates, it is not an absolute right, but has to be balanced against the rights of others and the public interest as a whole.

(c) In Australia, while the High Court has been slow to recognise any general common law guarantee of this right, it has now recognised that there is implied constitutional right of freedom of communication in political matters as an adjunct to the representative, democratic nature of the Australian constitutional system.\textsuperscript{87} To some extent, this development, applying Australia-wide, may have lessened the need for an express constitutional right on this matter.

(d) While it might be said that the right to freedom of expression is widely observed in Australia in practice, it is subject to many common law and legislative restrictions. Examples of these are the law of defamation — both at common law and statute — censorship laws, anti-discrimination legislation, the law of contempt, criminal interception laws, correctional service laws, the law as to breach of confidence and fiduciary duties, and other matters. The electronic media in Australia is largely controlled by federal legislation. Broadly speaking, these controls would mostly seem to fall within the ICCPR exceptions to the right. The right, if it was to be given constitutional force, would be directed at more blatant restrictions on freedom of expression which cannot reasonably be justified in a free and democratic society.

(e) There has in recent times been a concentration of media ownership in Australia under the wide legal freedoms that already exist, controlled to some extent by legislation on the electronic media and by cross-media and foreign investment rules. The concept of the freedom of the press has (to some extent at least) been impeded by this concentration. This is however, a development with national and international implications, largely beyond the control of the Northern Territory.

(f) Notwithstanding these developments on the High Court mentioned above, and the limited capacity of the Northern Territory to affect the media and other wider developments, it is difficult to conceive of a Bill of Rights in a new Northern Territory constitution without a provision for freedom of expression, at least in a qualified form.

14. Freedom of Assembly

(a) The ICCPR, in Article 21, recognises a right of peaceful assembly, to be restricted only in conformity with law where necessary in democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, public order, the protection of public health or morals or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

(b) This right is closely associated with the right to freedom of expression and the right to freedom of association — see below. It is a contentious right, in that public assemblies can in certain circumstances develop into demonstrations, and demonstrations can sometimes cease to be peaceful. However, the right to peaceful assembly has traditionally long been accepted as one of the fundamental rights.

(c) At common law, it was an offence to engage in an unlawful assembly of 3 or more persons where it gave grounds for apprehension of a breach of the peace or the commission of a crime by force. In the Northern Territory, the relevant provisions are now contained in the Criminal Code, the Police Administration Act and note the Summary Offences Act. Reference should also be made to the Public Order (Protection and Persons and Property) Act 1971 of the Commonwealth in relation to Commonwealth diplomatic and consular premises.

(d) Clearly the right has to be a restricted right in order to maintain peace and public security. This is reflected in Article 21 of the ICCPR. It is a matter of balancing the right of peoples to peaceful assembly and to express their views against the wider public interest.

89 see Part III Division 4 of the Criminal Code, section 148 of the Police Administration Act and note the Summary Offences Act.
15. Freedom of Association

(a) The ICCPR contains in Article 21 a right for everyone to freedom of association with others, including as to trade unions. It is subject to the same restrictions as is the right of peaceful assembly in Article 21, except that this is not to prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on members of the armed forces or the police.

(b) Article 22.3 of the ICCPR states that nothing in Article 22 authorises legislative measures which would prejudice the 1948 ILO Convention Concerning Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise. That Convention came into operation in Australia on 28 February 1974 and contains 9 Articles on freedom of association with respect to workers and employers’ organisations, their membership, establishment and administration, plus an Article on protection of the right to organise.

(c) Article 22 is clearly not limited to employer or employee associations and has very wide application. Again it is a restricted right, to be balanced against the wider public interest.

(d) There is no common law right of freedom of association as such. Controls on the formation of trade unions and their membership are contained in the Industrial Relations Act 1988 of the Commonwealth and are not at present directly relevant to the self-governing Northern Territory, which has very limited industrial powers. Whether this position will continue if further constitutional development takes place in the Territory is as yet uncertain. It should also be noted that the Northern Territory Anti-Discrimination Act prohibits discrimination on the ground of trade union or employer association activity, with limited exceptions. Clubs are not permitted to discriminate under that Act on any of the specified grounds except in certain circumstances on the basis of the preservation of a minority culture, the prevention or reduction of disadvantage, or age or sex.

(e) Much of the controversy over this right revolves around the alleged right not to associate. This is not expressly dealt with in Article 22 of the ICCPR, although it is expressed in Article 20.2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. However this latter provision may not apply to trade unions.

16. Right to Participate in Public Affairs

(a) Article 25 of the ICCPR provides that every citizen has the right and opportunity, without discrimination and without unreasonable restrictions, to take part in public affairs directly or through freely chosen representatives, to vote at periodic elections by universal and equal suffrage and by secret ballot guaranteeing the free expression of the will of electors and to have access on general terms of equality to the public service.\textsuperscript{93}

(b) The matter of the electoral system and the qualifications of electors and candidates for the proposed new Northern Territory Parliament have been dealt with in the Committee's Discussion Paper.\textsuperscript{94} This included tentative recommendations as to a form of direct Parliamentary representation, with single member electorates, adult suffrage and secret ballots.

(c) Questions of access to the Northern Territory Public Sector are dealt with in the Public Sector Employment and Management Act and the Anti-Discrimination Act of the Northern Territory.

\section*{17. Non Discrimination and Equal Protection of the Law}

(a) The ICCPR contains a number of provisions of relevance in this regard. \textit{Article 2} places an obligation on state parties to the Convention to respect and ensure the rights therein without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status. \textit{Article 3} provides for the equal rights of men and women to the enjoyment of the rights in the Convention. \textit{Article 14} includes a provision that all persons are equal before courts and tribunals. \textit{Article 16} gives everyone a right to recognition as a person before the law. \textit{Article 26} provides that all persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to the equal protection of the law. The law is to prohibit discrimination and to guarantee the equal and effective protection against discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.\textsuperscript{95}

(b) In the Northern Territory, discrimination on stated grounds is prohibited under the Anti-Discrimination Act (with certain exceptions), and various Commonwealth Acts also prohibit certain forms of discrimination — for example, the Racial Discrimination Act 1975. The above rights in the ICCPR are expressed in a more positive form and are based on the concepts of equality and non-discrimination. In some of the other instruments in the Appendices, it is a right qualified by an affirmative action provision in favour of the disadvantaged.\textsuperscript{96}

\textsuperscript{93} see Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 21, USA Constitution as to various provisions for the election of the President and Congress, and see the 15th, 19th, 24th and 26th Amendments, Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 3, New Zealand Bill of Rights Act, section 12, Papua New Guinea Constitution, section 50, Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, sections 6 and 22.

\textsuperscript{95} see Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Articles 2 and 7, USA Constitution, 14th Amendment Section 1, Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 15, New Zealand Bill of Rights Act, section 19, Papua New Guinea Constitution, section 55, European Convention on Human Rights, Article 14, Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, section 8.

(c) The Australian Constitution itself contains certain principles based on equality and non-discrimination across mainland Australia. However these fall far short of a general principle of equality before the law and non discrimination. Some members of the High Court have propounded an implied principle of equality under the law, of uncertain scope.

(d) A constitutional provision against discrimination on stated grounds is likely to be less controversial that a constitutional provision for equality before or under the law, or a right to the equal protection of the law. The concept of equality can be a difficult concept to apply in practice. In the USA, the equal protection provision in the 14th Amendment has given rise to considerable litigation and controversy. In Canada, section 15 of The Charter has become one of the most litigated provisions. Such provisions can raise very broad issues such as integration and segregation, access to public benefits and services, entitlements to professional and trade qualifications, access to the courts and legal aid and many other matters.

(e) A distinction may need to be drawn between equality before the law, and equality under the law. The former may be limited to formal equality, whereas the latter may imply substantive equality and is of much wider application. The concept of equal protection extends to substantive equality.

(f) An alternative would be to only have a constitutional provision against discrimination, such as in the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act and in the European Convention on Human Rights.

(g) This discussion leaves aside the special position of the Aboriginal inhabitants of the Northern Territory, being the subject of separate Committee Discussion Papers. To the extent that a new Northern Territory constitution makes any specific provision for Aboriginal rights, these should, in the Committee's view, be compatible with the multiracial and multi-cultural nature of the Territory and the broad principles of equality and non-discrimination, subject perhaps to recognition of the principle of affirmative action. In the view taken by the Supreme Court in the USA, justifiable forms of affirmative action are non discriminatory in character, although some members at least of the High Court appear to have taken a different view.

18. Other Rights

(a) The enumerated list of rights discussed above are not to be taken as exhaustive of those civil and political rights that could be considered for inclusion in a new Northern Territory constitution. The Committee would welcome comments and suggestions, not only as to these enumerated rights, but also as to any other rights that might be considered for inclusion.

(b) Particular rights that might be considered in this regard include:

(i) The right to own property and to fair compensation for the arbitrary deprivation of property.

(ii) The right to freedom from arbitrary or unreasonable searches, entry and seizures.

(iii) Equality of the sexes.

(iv) Rights of the Child.

(v) The Right to Petition Government.

(vi) The right to trial by jury.

(vii) The right to freedom of information.

(viii) Language and Cultural Rights of Minorities.

106 This has been already mentioned under in paragraph 17 - p.46-48, as to equality and non-discrimination. In at least one the instruments in the Appendices, it is treated separately and given superior force over other rights — see Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 28.

108 see USA Constitution, first Amendment, Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, section 16.

19. General Qualifications to Rights

It is normally accepted that particular human rights are not absolute in nature. That is, they can be qualified in certain respects having regard to the rights of others and the wider public interest. The following is a discussion of possible qualifications to any Northern Territory Bill of Rights for consideration.

(a) Should a Bill of Rights bind other than government?

One question is whether any new Northern Territory Bill of Rights should only be applicable to the institutions of government and its agencies, and persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf, or whether it should be capable of having a wider application to the public generally. In part, this question is related to that of enforcement, discussed in the next item. It is not uncommon for Bills of Rights to be linked to government only in the former manner. On the other hand, the Committee understands that in the States of the USA and the Provinces of Canada, some Bills of Rights can have a wider application. In a sense, the primary goal of a Bill of Rights can be said to be to impose limitations on government, based on what are considered to be minimum standards of conduct of a fundamental nature. The fact is that government has potentially autocratic powers which it can lawfully exercise under legislation or at common law unless otherwise limited. However it has to be recognised that gross violations of human rights are not limited to actions by governments. The Committee would welcome comment on this issue.

(b) Should a Bill of Rights refer to Aboriginal Rights?

Another question to be addressed in any Northern Territory Bill of Rights is that of specific Aboriginal rights. As discussed, the Committee does not intend to deal with Aboriginal rights in this Paper. However, it has considered elsewhere the possible constitutional entrenchment of Aboriginal rights. It would therefore seem desirable, in any Northern Territory Bill of Rights, to include a provision to the effect that, except as otherwise provided in that Bill of Rights, a right elsewhere provided by the constitution as to particular rights of Aboriginal people is not adversely affected by the provisions of the Bill of Rights.

(c) Should a Bill of Rights have affirmative action provisions

Another issue is that of a possible constitutional provision that legally permits forms of affirmative action for the benefit of particular persons or groups who are disadvantaged, a matter already discussed. This is particularly important if there is to be a provision in the Bill of Rights against discrimination and/or about equality. A number of the national and international instruments considered in this Paper have express affirmative action provisions.\(^{117}\)

(d) Should express qualifications to a Bill of Rights be permitted?

(i) A most important issue is the extent to which any Bill of Rights should have any provisions which legally permits the qualification of any express rights for justifiable reasons. This is in part related to the need to balance the application of particular rights with each other, arising from the principle of the indivisibility of rights. In part, it relates to the need to balance individual rights with the wider public interest. This is a delicate issue. Too broad a qualification could significantly reduce the protection offered by a Bill of Rights and hence the justification for having one. Too narrow a qualification could result in injustices and invite judicial invention of implications considered necessary or desirable.

(ii) Most Bills of Rights permit such qualifications applicable in limited circumstances. Thus the ICCPR has express exceptions in particular Articles.\(^{118}\) Some of these have already been mentioned in this Paper. Some of the national instruments in the Appendices contain a general qualification, such as in section 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which guarantees the rights and freedoms therein, "subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society."\(^{119}\)

(iii) Arguably, there are some rights which are so basic that they should never be subject to qualification - for example, the right not to be subjected to torture.\(^{120}\)

(iv) Ultimately it is a matter for the judiciary to interpret and apply any such qualifications, no matter how carefully expressed. Some guidance could be given in undertaking this task by requiring the judiciary to have regard to specific factors such as public safety, public order, public health and the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. In addition, the judiciary would be assisted by a provision directing it to have regard to authoritative judgments, findings and opinions of international and national courts, tribunals and other bodies concerning comparable human rights, and any other relevant information.

(e) Should there be power to suspend a Bill of Rights?

(i) Another issue for consideration is whether there should be any power to suspend the operation of all or any parts of any Northern Territory Bill of Rights in an emergency. Such a provision is contained in Article 4 of the ICCPR in fairly limited circumstances. It must be a public emergency which threatens the life of the nation and its existence, the measures may be taken only to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, the measures must not be inconsistent with the nation's obligations under international law and must not involve discrimination solely on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin. No derogation is permitted from the rights concerning life, torture and other unacceptable punishments, slavery, imprisonment for debts, retrospective criminal offences, recognition as a person before the law, and freedom of religion. There is an obligation to inform other state parties of the measures and their termination.121

(ii) These are clear dangers in any power to suspend a Bill of Rights. Similar provisions in the constitutions of some other countries have sometimes been abused. If there is to be such a provision in any Northern Territory Bill of Rights, it seems clear that it should be strictly limited and that these limits should be judicially enforceable.

(iii) There is also a question whether the fixed maximum term of the Parliament should be capable of extension by government or the Parliament in a genuine emergency. This is a matter not discussed in the Committee's first Discussion Paper. By way of comparison, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides for such a power in section 4.122 The same question arises in respect of the maximum time between Parliamentary sittings.

(f) Other Matters

(i) There may be other provisions that should be considered for inclusion in a Northern Territory Bill of Rights. For example, that the rights expressed in that Bill are without limitation to any other rights, and that the Bill is to be interpreted such that no person or organisation is to be entitled to do anything aimed at the destruction or limitation of the rights of others. It might also be considered that a provision should be inserted requiring the Bill of Rights to be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural nature of the Northern Territory community, based on freedom and equality, so as to promote harmony, tolerance and unity.\textsuperscript{123}

(ii) The Committee invites comment on all of these matters.

G. ENFORCEMENT AND ENTRENCHMENT OF A NORTHERN TERRITORY
BILL OF RIGHTS

I. Enforcement and Entrenchment generally

(a) The effectiveness of any Bill of Rights largely depends upon the extent to which it is capable of being enforced against the person or body in breach. However, the desirability of effective enforcement mechanisms has to be balanced against the desirability of the democratically elected legislature having the maximum capacity to enact laws which it considers to be in the best interests of the community, and for government to be able to administer those laws and to be able to govern effectively and efficiently with the minimum of restrictions.

(b) The issue of enforceability and entrenchment can be directly related. The greater the degree of entrenchment of a Bill of Rights in a constitution, that is, the more difficult it is to later change that Bill of Rights, the more likely it is to be capable of effective enforcement. The greater the degree of entrenchment, the more difficult it will be for government to secure a change to the Bill of Rights where it is found to be operating in a manner that is disadvantageous to effective and efficient government or to the wider public interest generally.

(c) Most national Bills of Rights are constitutionally entrenched to some degree. The Bill of Rights Act in New Zealand is more an exception in this regard, being in the form of an ordinary statute of the Parliament, capable of being amended or repealed by a later statute.\textsuperscript{124} On the other hand, it is still an Act capable of being enforced through the courts against government.

(d) Most national Bills of Rights are enforceable through the courts. However, the effectiveness of this depends on the extent to which the principle of the independence of the judiciary is established in the particular jurisdiction. This is a matter discussed in the Committee's Discussion Paper.\textsuperscript{125}

2. Options

Assuming a Bill of Rights is to be adopted in the Northern Territory as part of its further constitutional development, the possible options for its adoption are as follows:

\textsuperscript{124} see Appendix 3.
\textsuperscript{125} 1987. Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development. Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory, Darwin.
(a) Ordinary Statute

There may be some advantages to including the Bill of Rights in an ordinary statute, such as has been done in New Zealand, and was first done in Canada. This would enable the Bill to be given a "phasing-in" trial period, when its operation could be assessed and analysed and any deficiencies corrected where necessary. The Bill could be given constitutional status after that initial period had expired and the judiciary and others had adjusted to the changes introduced by it. The Bill could also be enacted by the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly before the commencement of the new constitution if thought appropriate. This may be an option that would appeal to those who favour some legal statement of rights as part of further Northern Territory constitutional development, but who might be concerned about the wide ramifications of an enforceable Bill of Rights that was firmly entrenched in the constitution from its inception and which might have unforeseen consequences in the particular circumstances of the Northern Territory.

(b) Organic Law

The option of a Bill of Rights in an organic law may also have some attractions, in that while the Bill of Rights would remain as a statute and could be changed later if found necessary. Any such change would have to comply with the specified amendment procedures for organic laws, involving a special majority of the Parliament and associated safeguards against hasty amendment. The difficulty in practice with this suggestion is that the Northern Territory presently has no power to make organic laws, so the option could not be implemented until after the new constitution came into effect.

(c) Preamble to the new Northern Territory constitution

The inclusion of the Bill of Rights in a preamble to the new Territory constitution, presumably in a form that was not directly enforceable in the courts at the suit of a person claiming an infringement of rights, is another option deserving consideration. Whilst not directly enforceable, the Bill could have some meaningful operation, in that the provisions of the Bill may impact upon matters of legal interpretation of other laws in appropriate cases, and may also affect the manner of administration of those laws by government by way of introducing a further relevant matter for consideration by administrators.

(d) Non-enforceable constitutional provision

A variation of the option discussed in paragraph (c) above would be to include the Bill of Rights in the body of the new constitution itself, but to expressly provide that that part was not to be directly enforceable at the suit of any person in the courts, nor was it to provide a defence in any court action against that person. Its operation could be limited to matters of interpretation and administration, discussed above.

(e) Parliamentary Scrutiny

The options discussed in paragraphs (c) or (d) above could also be combined with a constitutional provision for the establishment of a standing Parliamentary Committee, the duty of which would include that of considering all legislation (including subordinate legislation) and reporting on whether it complied with the Bill of Rights. Such a provision along these lines was recommended in the Report by the Legal and Constitutional Committee of the Victorian Parliament.126

(f) Ombudsman

The option in paragraph (e) above could also be supplemented by a constitutional provision conferring on the Northern Territory Ombudsman the duty of considering all administrative actions the subject of a complaint and reporting on whether they complied with the Bill of Rights, together with any recommendations for changes in matters of administration in order to conform to the Bill.

(g) Enforceable constitutional provision

If it is considered that all of these options are too weak, and do not effectively secure a minimum standard of fundamental rights, the only option is a constitutionally entrenched Bill of Rights, directly enforceable in the courts. There would still be a question of the degree of entrenchment of that Bill of Rights in that constitution. One possibility would be to provide for a simpler method of amendment then a referendum for an initial trial period, perhaps by a special majority of the Parliament only. Another possibility would be to give the Parliament the power of later amendment of the Bill of Rights by way of an express overriding statute, but to provide that any such amendment only operates for a limited period of years — as in Canada.127

(h) Status quo

If none of these options are considered to be acceptable, then the status quo will remain, that is, there will be no comprehensive Bill of Rights as part of further Northern Territory constitutional development. However, there may well be selected constitutional provisions of a human rights nature on particular topics, for example, against any compulsory acquisition of property without fair compensation, and there would still be scope for introducing a statutory Bill of Rights or possibly an organic law at a later time. The advantage of framing a Bill of Rights at the same time as the adoption of a new Northern Territory constitution as a part of further Northern Territory constitutional development would, however, be lost.

(i) The Committee repeats that it has as yet made no firm decision of the question of whether there should be a Bill of Rights for the Northern Territory, and if so, what rights it should contain, the extent to which it should be entrenched and how it should be enforceable. These are matters upon which it invites public comment.

APPENDIX 2

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol, 1996
International covenant on civil and political rights, 1966

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Covenant,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Recognizing that these rights derive from the inherent dignity of the human person,

Recognizing that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the ideal of free human beings enjoying civil and political freedom and freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy his civil and political rights, as well as his economic, social and cultural rights,

Considering the obligation of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and freedoms,

Realizing that the individual, having duties to other individuals and to the community to which he belongs, is under a responsibility to strive for promotion and observance of the rights recognized in the present Covenant,

Agree upon the following articles:

PART I

Article 1

1. All peoples have the right of self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.

2. All peoples may, for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources without prejudice to any obligations arising out of international economic co-operation, based upon the principle of mutual benefit, and international law. In no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence.

3. The States Parties to the present Covenant, including those having responsibility for the administration of Non-Self-Governing and Trust Territories, shall promote the realization of the right of self-determination and shall respect that right, in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.

PART II

Article 2

1. Each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the present Covenant, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.
2. Where not already provided for by existing legislative or other measures each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes to take the necessary steps, in accordance with its constitutional processes and with the provisions of the present Covenant, to adopt such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to give effect to the rights recognized in the present Covenant.

3. Each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes:

   (a) To ensure that any person whose rights or freedoms as herein recognized are violated shall have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity;

   (b) To ensure that any person claiming such a remedy shall have his right thereto determined by competent judicial, administrative or legislative authorities, or by any other competent authority provided for by the legal system of the State, and to develop the possibilities of judicial remedy;

   (c) To ensure that the competent authorities shall enforce such remedies when granted.

Article 3

The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to ensure the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all civil and political rights set forth in the present Covenant.

Article 4

1. In time of public emergency which threatens the life of the nation and the existence of which is officially proclaimed, the State Parties to the present Covenant may take measures derogating from their obligations under the present Covenant to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, provided that such measures are not inconsistent with their other obligations under international law and do not involve discrimination solely on the ground of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin.

2. No derogation from Articles 6, 7, 8 (paragraphs 1 and 2), 11, 15, 16 and 18 may be made under this provision.

3. Any State Party to the present Covenant availing itself of the right of derogation shall immediately inform the other States Parties to the present Covenant, through the intermediary of the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the provisions from which it has derogated and of the reasons by which it was actuated. A further communication shall be made, through the same intermediary on the date on which it terminates such derogation.

Article 5

1. Nothing in the present Covenant may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognized therein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the present Covenant.

2. There shall be no restriction upon or derogation from any of the fundamental human rights recognized or existing in any State Party to the present Covenant pursuant to law, conventions, regulations or custom on the pretext that the present Covenant does not recognize such rights or that recognizes them to a lesser extent.
PART III

Article 6
1. Every human being has the inherent right to life. This right shall be protected by law. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life.

2. In countries which have not abolished the death penalty, sentence of death may be imposed only for the most serious crimes in accordance with the law in force at the time of the commission of the crime and not contrary to the provisions of the present Covenant and to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. This penalty can only be carried out pursuant to a final judgment rendered by a competent court.

3. When deprivation of life constitutes the crime of genocide, it is understood that nothing in this Article shall authorize any State Party to the present Covenant to derogate in any way from any obligation assumed under the provisions of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

4. Anyone sentenced to death shall have the right to seek pardon or commutation of the sentence. Amnesty, pardon or commutation of the sentence of death may be granted in all cases.

5. Sentence of death shall not be imposed for crimes committed by persons below eighteen years of age and shall not be carried out on pregnant women.

6. Nothing in this Article shall be invoked to delay or to prevent the abolition of capital punishment by any State Party to the present Covenant.

Article 7

No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. In particular, no one shall be subjected without his free consent to medical or scientific experimentation.

Article 8

1. No one shall be held in slavery; slavery and the slave-trade in all their forms shall be prohibited.

2. No one shall be held in servitude.

3. (a) No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour;

(b) Paragraph 3 (a) shall not be held to preclude, in countries where imprisonment with hard labour may be imposed as a punishment for a crime, the performance of hard labour in pursuance of a sentence to such punishment by a competent court;

(c) For the purpose of this paragraph the term 'forced or compulsory labour' shall not include:

(i) Any work or service, not referred to in sub-paragraph (b), normally required of a person who is under detention in consequence of a lawful order of a court, or of a person during conditional release from such detention;

(ii) Any service of a military character and, in countries where conscientious objection is recognized, any national service required by law of conscientious objectors;
(iii) Any service exacted in cases of emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community;

(iv) Any work or service which forms part of normal civil obligations.

Article 9

1. Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be subject to arbitrary arrest or detention. No one shall be deprived of his liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedures as are established by law.

2. Anyone who is arrested shall be informed, at the time of arrest, of the reason for his arrest and shall be promptly informed of any charges against him.

3. Anyone arrested or detained on a criminal charge shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorized by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release. It shall not be the general rule that persons awaiting trial shall be detained in custody, but release may be subject to guarantees to appear for trial, at any other stage of the judicial proceedings, and, should occasion arise for execution of the judgment.

4. Anyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings before a court, in order that that court may decide without delay on the lawfulness of his detention and order his release if the detention is not lawful.

5. Anyone who has been the victim of unlawful arrest or detention shall have an enforceable right to compensation.

Article 10

1. All persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person.

2. (a) Accused persons shall, save in exceptional circumstances, be segregated from convicted persons and shall be subject to separate treatment appropriate to their status as unconvicted persons;

   (b) Accused juvenile persons shall be separated from adults and brought as speedily as possible for adjudication.

3. The penitentiary system shall comprise treatment of prisoners the essential aim of which shall be their reformation and social rehabilitation. Juvenile offenders shall be segregated from adults and be accorded treatment appropriate to their age and legal status.

Article 11

No one shall be imprisoned merely on the ground of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation.

Article 12

1. Everyone lawfully within the territory of a State shall, within that territory, have the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his residence.

2. Everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own.

3. The above-mentioned rights shall not be subject to any restrictions except those which are provided by law, are necessary to protect national security, public order (ordre public), public health or morals or the rights and freedoms of others, and are consistent with the other rights recognized in the present Covenant.
4. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of the right to enter his own country.

Article 13
An alien lawfully, in the territory of a State Party to the present Covenant may be expelled therefrom only in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with law and shall, except where compelling reasons of national security otherwise require, be allowed to submit the reasons against his expulsion and to have his case reviewed by, and be represented for the purpose before, the competent authority or a person or persons especially designated by the competent authority.

Article 14
1. All persons shall be equal before the courts and tribunals. In the determination of any criminal charge against him, or of his rights and obligations in a suit at law, everyone shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law. The Press and the public may be excluded from all or part of a trial for reasons of morals, public order (ordre public) or national security in a democratic society, or when the interest of the private lives of the parties so requires, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice; but any judgement rendered in a criminal case or in a suit at law shall be made public except where the interest of juvenile persons otherwise requires or the proceedings concern matrimonial disputes or the guardianship of children.

2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall have the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.

3. In the determination of any criminal charge against him, everyone shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:

   (a) To be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him;

   (b) To have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence and to communicate with counsel of his own choosing;

   (c) To be tried without undue delay;

   (d) To be tried in his presence, and to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing; to be informed, if he does not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to him, in any case where the interests of justice so require, and without payment by him in any such case if he does not have sufficient means to pay for it;

   (e) To examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;

   (f) To have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court;

   (g) Not to be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt.

4. In the case of juvenile persons, the procedure shall be such as will take account of their age and the desirability of promoting their rehabilitation.
5. Everyone convicted of a crime shall have the right to his conviction and sentence being reviewed by a higher tribunal according to law.

6. When a person has by a final decision been convicted of a criminal offence and when subsequently his conviction has been reversed or he has been pardoned on the ground that a new or newly discovered fact shows exclusively that there has been a miscarriage of justice, the person who has suffered punishment as a result of such conviction shall be compensated according to law, unless it is proved that the non-disclosure of the unknown fact in time is wholly or partly attributable to him.

7. No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again for an offence for which he has already been finally convicted or acquitted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of each country.

Article 15

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time when the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of the offence, provision is made by law for the imposition of a lighter penalty, the offender shall benefit thereby.

2. Nothing in this article shall prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations.

Article 16

Everyone shall have the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

Article 17

1. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his honour and reputation.

2. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

Article 18

1. Everyone shall have the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right shall include freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of his choice, and freedom, either individually or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in worship, observance, practice and teaching.

2. No one shall be subject to coercion which would impair his freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of his choice.

3. Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs limitations as may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.

4. The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to have respect for the liberty of parents and, when applicable, legal guardians to ensure the religious and moral education of their children in conformity with their own convictions.
Article 19

1. Everyone shall have the right to hold opinions without interference.

2. Everyone shall have the right to freedom of expression; this right shall include freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art, or through any other media of his choice.

3. The exercise of the rights provided for in paragraph 2 of this article carries with it special duties and responsibilities. It may therefore be subject to certain restrictions, but these shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary:

   (a) For respect of the rights or reputations of others,

   (b) For the protection of national security or of public order (ordre public), or of public health or morals.

Article 20

1. Any propaganda for war shall be prohibited by law.

2. Any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence shall be prohibited by law.

Article 21

The right of peaceful assembly shall be recognized. No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of this right other than those imposed in conformity with the law and which are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, public order (ordre public), the protection of public health or morals or the protection of the freedoms of others.

Article 22

1. Everyone shall have the right to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

2. No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of this right other than those which are prescribed by law and which are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, public order (ordre public), the protection of public health or morals or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This Article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on members of the armed forces and of the police in their exercise of this right.

3. Nothing in this article shall authorize States Parties to the International Labour Organization Convention of 1948 concerning Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize to take legislative measures which would prejudice or to apply the law in such a manner as to prejudice, the guarantees provided for in that Convention.

Article 23

1. The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.

2. The right of men and women of marriageable age to marry and to found a family shall be recognized.

3. No marriage shall be entered into without the free and full consent of the intending spouses.
4. States Parties to the present Covenant shall take appropriate steps to ensure equality of rights and responsibilities of spouses as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution. In the case of dissolution, provision shall be made for the necessary protection of any children.

Article 24

1. Every child shall have, without any discrimination as to race, colour, language, religion, national or social origin, property or birth, the right to such measures of protection as are required by his status as a minor, on the part of his family, society and the State.

2. Every child shall be registered immediately after birth and shall have a name.

3. Every child has the right to acquire a nationality.

Article 25

Every citizen shall have the right and the opportunity without any of the distinctions mentioned in Article 2 and without unreasonable restrictions:

(a) To take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives;

(b) To vote and to be elected at genuine periodic elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret ballot guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the electors;

(c) To have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in his country.

Article 26

All persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to the equal protection of the law. In this respect, the law prohibit any discrimination and guarantee to all persons equal and effective protection against discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

Article 27

In those States in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities exist, persons belonging to such minorities shall not be denied the right, in community with the other members of their group, to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practise their own religion, or to use their own language.

PART IV

Article 28

1. There shall be established a Human Rights Committee (hereafter referred to in the present Covenant as the Committee). It shall consist of eighteen members and shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided.

2. The Committee shall be composed of nationals of the States Parties to the present Covenant who shall be persons of high moral character and recognized competence in the field of human rights, consideration being given to the usefulness of the participation of some persons having legal experience.

3. The members of the Committee shall be elected and shall serve in their personal capacity.
Article 29

1. The members of the Committee shall be elected by secret ballot from a list of persons possessing the qualifications prescribed in Article 28 and nominated for the purpose by the States Parties to the present Covenant.

2. Each State Party to the present Covenant may nominate not more than two persons. These persons shall be nationals of the nominating State.

3. A person shall be eligible for renomination.

Article 30

1. The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the date of the entry into force of the present Covenant.

2. At least four months before the date of each election to the Committee, other than an election to fill a vacancy declared in accordance with Article 34, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written invitation to the States Parties to the present Covenant to submit their nominations for membership of the Committee within three months.

3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated, with an indication of the States Parties which have nominated them, and shall submit it to the States Parties to the present Covenant no later than one month before the date of each election.

4. Elections of the members of the Committee shall be held at a meeting of the States Parties to the present Covenant convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations at the Headquarters of the United Nations. At that meeting, for which two thirds of the States Parties to the present Covenant shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Committee shall be those nominees who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of States Parties present and voting.

Article 31

1. The Committee may not include more than one national of the same State.

2. In the election of the Committee, consideration shall be given to equitable geographical distribution of membership and to the representation of the different forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems.

Article 32

1. The members of the Committee shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election if renominated. However, the terms of nine of the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election, the names of these nine members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting referred to in Article 30, paragraph 4.

2. Elections at the expiry of office shall be held in accordance with preceding Articles of this part of the present Covenant.

Article 33

1. If in the unanimous opinion of the other members, a member of the Committee has ceased to carry out his functions for any cause other than absence of a temporary character, the Chairman of the Committee shall notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall then declare the seat of that member to be vacant.
In the event of the death or the resignation of a member of the Committee, the Chairman shall immediately notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall declare the seat vacant from the date of death or the date on which the resignation takes effect.

Article 34

1. When a vacancy is declared in accordance with Article 33 and if the term of office of the member to be replaced does not expire within six months of the declaration of the vacancy, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall notify each of the States Parties to the present Covenant, which may within two months submit nominations in accordance with Article 29 for the purpose of fulfilling the vacancy.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of the persons thus nominated and shall submit it to the States Parties to the present Covenant. The election to fill the vacancy shall then take place in accordance with the relevant provisions of this part of the present Covenant.

3. A member of the Committee elected to fill a vacancy declared in accordance with Article 33 shall hold office for the remainder of the term of the member who vacated the seat of the Committee under the provisions of that Article.

Article 35

The members of the Committee shall, with the approval of the General Assembly of the United Nations, receive emoluments from United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as the General Assembly may decide, having regard to the importance of the Committee's responsibilities.

Article 36

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee under the present Covenant.

Article 37

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene the initial meeting of the Committee at the Headquarters of the United Nations.

2. After its initial meeting, the Committee shall meet at such times as shall be provided in its rules of procedure.

Article 38

Every member of the Committee shall, before taking up his duties make a solemn declaration in open committee that he will perform his functions impartially and conscientiously.

Article 39

1. The Committee shall elect its officers for a term of two years. They may be re-elected.

2. The Committee shall establish its own rules of procedure, but these rules shall provide, inter alia that:

(a) Twelve members shall constitute a quorum;
(b) Decisions of the Committee shall be made by a majority vote of the members present.

Article 40

1. The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to submit reports on the measures they have adopted which give effect to the rights recognized herein and on the progress made in the enjoyment of those rights:

   (a) Within one year of the entry into force of the present Covenant for the States Parties concerned;

   (b) Thereafter whenever the Committee so requests.

2. All reports shall be submitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit them to the Committee for consideration. Reports shall indicate the factors and difficulties, if any, affecting the implementation of the present Covenant.

3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations may, after consultation with the Committee, transmit to the specialized agencies concerned copies of such parts of the reports as may fall within their field of competence.

4. The Committee shall study the reports submitted by the States Parties to the present Covenant. It shall transmit its reports, and such general comments as it may consider appropriate, to the States Parties. The Committee may also transmit to the Economic and Social Council these comments along with the copies of the reports it has received from States Parties to the present Covenant.

5. The States Parties to the present Covenant may submit to the Committee observations on any comments that may be made in accordance with paragraph 4 of this Article.

Article 41

1. A State Party to the present Covenant may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the present Covenant. Communications under this article may be received and considered only if submitted by a State Party which has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Committee. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration. Communications received under this Article shall be dealt with in accordance with the following procedure:

   (a) If a State Party to the present Covenant considers that another State Party is not giving effect to the provisions of the present Covenant, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State Party. Within three months after the receipt of the communication, the receiving State shall afford the State which sent the communication an explanation or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter, which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent, reference to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending, or available in the matter.

   (b) If the matter is not adjusted to the satisfaction of both States Parties concerned within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Committee, by notice given to the Committee and to the other State.
(c) The Committee shall deal with a matter referred to it only after it has ascertained that all available domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter, in conformity with the generally recognized principles of international law. This shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged.

(d) The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article.

(e) Subject to the provisions of sub-paragraph (c), the Committee shall make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognized in the present Covenant.

(f) In any matter referred to it, the Committee may call upon the States Parties concerned, referred to in sub-paragraph (b), to supply any relevant information.

(g) The States Parties concerned, referred to in sub-paragraph (b), shall have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered in the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing.

(h) The Committee shall, within twelve months after the date of receipt of notice under sub-paragraph (b), submit a report:

(i) If a solution within the terms of sub-paragraph (e) is reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached;

(ii) If a solution within the terms of sub-paragraph (e) is not reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts; the written submissions and record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned shall be attached to the report.

In every matter, the report shall be communicated to the States Parties concerned.

2. The provisions of this Article shall come into force when ten States Parties to the present Covenant have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this Article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this Article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

Article 42

1. (a) If a matter referred to the Committee in accordance with Article 41 is not resolved to the satisfaction of the States Parties concerned, the Committee may, with the prior consent of the States Parties concerned, appoint an ad hoc Conciliation Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission). The good offices of the Commission shall be made available to the States Parties concerned with a view to an amicable solution of the matter on the basis of respect for the present Covenant;
(b) The Commission shall consist of five persons acceptable to the States Parties concerned. If the States Parties concerned fail to reach agreement within three months on all or part of the composition of the Commission the members of the Commission concerning whom no agreement has been reached shall be elected by secret ballot by a two-thirds majority vote of the Committee from among its members.

2. The members of the Commission shall serve in their personal capacity. They shall not be nationals of the States Parties concerned, or of a State not party to the present Covenant, or of a State Party which has not made, the declaration under Article 41.

3. The Commission shall elect its own Chairman and adopt its own rules of procedure.

4. The meetings of the Commission shall normally be held at the Head quarters of the United Nations or at the United Nations Office at Geneva. However, they may be held at such other convenient places as the Commission may determine in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the States Parties concerned.

5. The secretariat provided in accordance with Article 36 shall also service, the commissions appointed under this article.

6. The information received and collated by the Committee shall be made available to the Commission and the Commission may call upon the State Parties concerned to supply any other relevant information.

7. When the Commission has fully considered the matter, but in any event not later than twelve months after having been seized of the matter, it shall submit to the Chairman of the Committee a report for communication to the States Parties concerned.

(a) If the Commission is unable to complete its consideration of the matter within twelve months, it shall confine its report to a brief statement of the status of its consideration of the matter.

(b) If an amicable solution to the matter on the basis of respect for human rights as recognized in the present Covenant is reached the Commission shall confine its report to a brief statement of the fact and of the solution reached.

(c) If a solution within the terms of sub-paragraph (b) is not reached, the Commission's report shall embody its findings on all questions of fact relevant to the issues between the States Parties concerned, and its views on the possibilities of an amicable solution of the matter. This report shall also contain the written submissions and a record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned.

(d) If the Commission's report is submitted under sub-paragraph (c), the States Parties concerned shall, within three months of the receipt of the report, notify the Chairman of the Committee whether or not they accept the contents of the report of the Commission.

8. The provisions of this Article are without prejudice to the responsibilities of the Committee under Article 41.

9. The States Parties concerned shall share equally all the expenses of the members of the Commission in accordance with estimates to be provided by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
10. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall be empowered to pay the expenses of the members of the Commission, if necessary, before reimbursement by the States Parties concerned, in accordance with paragraph 9 of this Article.

Article 43

The members of the Committee, and of the ad hoc conciliation commissions which may be appointed under Article 42, shall be entitled to the facilities, privileges and immunes of experts on mission for the United Nations as laid down in the relevant sections of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.

Article 44

The provisions for the implementation of the present Covenant shall apply without prejudice to the procedures prescribed in the field of human rights by or under the constituent instruments and the conventions of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies and shall not prevent the States Parties to the present Covenant from having recourse to other procedures for settling a dispute in accordance with general or special international agreements in force between them.

Article 45

The Committee shall submit to the General Assembly of the United Nations through the Economic and Social Council, an annual report on its activities.

PART V

Article 46

Nothing in the present Covenant shall be interpreted as impairing the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and of the constitutions of the specialized agencies which define the respective responsibilities of the various organs of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies in regard to the matters dealt with in the present Covenant.

Article 47

Nothing in the present Covenant shall be interpreted as impairing the inherent right of all peoples to enjoy and utilize fully and freely their natural wealth and resources.

Article 48

1. The present Covenant is open for signature by any State Member of the United Nations or member of any of its specialized agencies, by any State Party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, and by any other State which has been invited by the General Assembly of the United Nations to become a party to the present Covenant.

2. The present Covenant is subject to ratification. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. The present Covenant shall be open to accession by any State referred to in paragraph 1 of this article.

4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

5. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States which have signed this Covenant or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.
Article 49

1. The present Covenant shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the thirty-fifth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession.

2. For each State ratifying the present Covenant or acceding to it after the deposit of the thirty-fifth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession, the present Covenant shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or instrument of accession.

Article 50

The provisions of the present Covenant shall extend to all parts of federal States without any limitations or exceptions.

Article 51

1. Any State Party to the present Covenant may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall thereupon communicate any proposed amendments to the States Parties to the present Covenant with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposals. In the event that at least one third of the States Parties favours such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly of the United Nations for approval.

2. Amendments shall come into force when they have been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to the present Covenant in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

3. When amendments come into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Covenant and any earlier amendment which they have accepted.

Article 52

Irrespective of the notifications made under Article 48, paragraph 5, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States referred to in paragraph 1 of the same Article of the following particulars:

(a) Signatures, ratifications and accessions under Article 48;

(b) The date of the entry into force of the present Covenant under Article 49 and the date of the entry into force of any amendments under Article 51.

Article 53

1. The present Covenant, of which the Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Covenant to all States referred to in Article 48.
Optional protocol to the international covenant on civil and political rights, 1966

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Considering that in order further to achieve the purposes of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (hereinafter referred to as the Covenant) and the implementation of its provisions it would be appropriate to enable the Human Rights Committee set up in Part IV of the Covenant (hereinafter referred to as the Committee) to receive and consider, as provided in the present Protocol, communications from individuals claiming to be victim of violations of any of the rights set forth in the Covenant,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

A State Party to the Covenant that becomes a party to the present Protocol recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by that State Party of any of the rights set forth in the Covenant. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party to the Covenant which is not a party to the present Protocol.

Article 2

Subject to the provisions of Article 1, individuals who claim that any of their rights enumerated in the Covenant have been violated and who have exhausted all available domestic remedies may submit a written communication to the Committee for consideration.

Article 3

The Committee shall consider inadmissible any communication under the present Protocol which is anonymous, or which it considers to be an abuse of the right of submission of such communications or to be incompatible with the provisions of the Covenant.

Article 4

1. Subject to the provisions of Article 3, the Committee shall bring any communications submitted to it under the present Protocol to the attention of the State Party to the present Protocol alleged to be violating any provision of the Covenant.

2. Within six months, the receiving State shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been taken by that State.

Article 5

1. The Committee shall consider communications received under the present Protocol in the light of all written information made available to it by the individual and by the State Party concerned.

2. The Committee shall not consider any communication from an individual unless it has ascertained that:

   (a) The same matter is not examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement;

   (b) The individual has exhausted all available domestic remedies. This shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged.
3. The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under the present Protocol.

4. The Committee shall forward its views to the State Party concerned and to the individual.

Article 6

The Committee shall include in its annual report under Article 45 of the Covenant a summary of its activities under the present Protocol.

Article 7

Pending the achievement of the objectives of resolution 1514 (XV) adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 14 December 1960 concerning the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the provisions of the present Protocol shall in no way limit the right of petition granted to these peoples by the Charter of the United Nations and other international conventions and instruments under the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

Article 8

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State which has signed the Covenant.

2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification by any State which has ratified or acceded to the Covenant. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State which has ratified or acceded to the Covenant.

4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

5. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States which have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 9

1. Subject to the entry into force of the Covenant, the present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the tenth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession.

2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or instrument of accession.

Article 10

The provisions of the present Protocol shall extend to all parts of federal States without any limitations or exceptions.

Article 11

1. Any State Party to the present Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate any proposed amendments to the States Parties to the present Protocol with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that at least one-third of the States Parties favours such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly of the United Nations for approval.

2. Amendments shall come into force when they have been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accepted by a two-third majority of the States Parties to the present Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

3. When amendments come into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendment which they have accepted.

Article 12

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation shall take effect three months after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. Denunciation shall be without prejudice to the continued application of the provisions of the present Protocol to any communication submitted under Article 2 before the effective date of denunciation.

Article 13

Irrespective of the notifications made under Article 8, paragraph 5, of the present Protocol, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States referred to in Article 48, paragraph 1, of the Covenant of the following particulars:

(a) Signatures, ratifications and accessions under Article 8;

(b) The date of the entry into force of the present Protocol under Article 9 and the date of the entry into force of any amendments under Article 11;

(c) Denunciations under Article 12.

Article 14

1. The present Protocol, of which the Chinese, English, French Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States referred to in Article 48 of the Covenant.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

ARTICLE [XV]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE [XIX]

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE [XXIV]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice-President, for electors for President or Vice-President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE [XXVI]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
APPENDIX 5

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms
CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:
   (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
   (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
   (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
   (d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

   (2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion of insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature sitting at least once every twelve months.

Mobility Rights

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.
Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right
(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and
(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to
(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and
(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Legal Rights

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention
(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;
(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and
(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right,
(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;
(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;
(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;
(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations:

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

Equality Rights

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.
Official Languages of Canada

16. (1) English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

(2) English and French are the official languages of New Brunswick and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the legislature and government of New Brunswick.

(3) Nothing in this Charter limits the authority of Parliament or a legislature to advance the equality of status or use of English and French.

16.1 (1) The English linguistic community and the French linguistic community in New Brunswick have equality of status and equal rights and privileges, including the right to distinct educational institutions and such distinct cultural institutions as are necessary for the preservation and promotion of those communities.

(2) The role of the legislature and government of New Brunswick to preserve and promote the status, rights and privileges referred to in subsection (1) is affirmed. [New, Constitution Amendment 1993 (New Brunswick)]

17. (1) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of Parliament.

(2) Everyone has the right to use English or French in any debates and other proceedings of the legislature of New Brunswick.

18. (1) The statutes, records and journals of Parliament shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

(2) The statutes, records and journals of the legislature of New Brunswick shall be printed and published in English and French and both language versions are equally authoritative.

19. (1) Either English or French may be used in courts by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court established by Parliament.

(2) Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleadings in or process issuing from, any court of New Brunswick.

20. (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or
(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

21. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

Minority Language Educational Rights

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province, have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.
Enforcement

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

General

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any affected by aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired. [Amended, Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.]

26. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada.

27. This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

28. Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

29. Nothing in this Charter abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of Canada in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools.

30. A reference in this Charter to a province or to the legislative assembly or legislature of a province shall be deemed to include a reference to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, or to the appropriate legislative authority thereof, as the case may be.

31. Nothing in this Charter extends the legislative powers of any body or authority.

Application of Charter

32. (1) This Charter applies
(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

(2) An Act or a provision of an Act in respect of which a declaration made under this section is in effect shall have such operation as it would have but for the provision of this Charter referred to in the declaration.

(3) A declaration made under subsection (1) shall cease to have effect five years after it comes into force or on such earlier date as may be specified in the declaration.

(4) Parliament or the legislature of a province may re-enact a declaration made under subsection (1).

(5) Subsection (3) applies in respect of a re-enactment made under subsection (4).

RELEVANT EXCERPTS FROM THE CONSTITUTION OF THE INDEPENDENT STATE OF PAPUA NEW GUINEA

PREAMBLE (part thereof)

WE HEREBY PROCLAIM the following aims as our National Goals, and direct all persons and bodies, corporate and unincorporate, to be guided by these our declared Directives in pursuing and achieving our aims :-

1. - INTEGRAL HUMAN DEVELOPMENT.

We declare our first goal to be for every person to be dynamically involved in the process of freeing himself or herself from every form of domination or oppression that each man or woman will have the opportunity to develop as a whole person in relationship with others.

WE ACCORDINGLY CALL FOR -

(1) everyone to be involved in our endeavours to achieve integral human development of the whole person for every person and to seek fulfilment through his or her contribution to the common good; and

(2) education to be based on mutual respect and dialogue, and to promote awareness of our human potential and motivation to achieve our National Goals through self-reliant effort; and

(3) all forms of beneficial creativity, including sciences and cultures, to be actively encouraged; and

(4) improvement in the level of nutrition and the standard of public health to enable our people to attain self fulfilment; and

(5) the family unit to be recognized as the fundamental basis of our society, and for every step to be taken to promote the moral, cultural, economic and social standing of the Melanesian family; and

(6) development to take place primarily through the use of Papua New Guinean forms of social and political organization.

2. - EQUALITY AND PARTICIPATION.

We declare our second goal to be for all citizens to have an equal opportunity to participate in, and benefit from the development of our country.

WE ACCORDINGLY CALL FOR -

(1) an equal opportunity for every citizen to take part in the political, economic, social, religious and cultural life of the country; and
(2) the creation of political structures that will enable effective, meaningful participation by our people in that life, and in view of the rich cultural and ethnic diversity of our people for those structures to provide for "substantial decentralization of all forms of government activity; and

(3) every effort to be made to achieve an equitable distribution of incomes and other benefits of development among individuals and throughout the various parts of the country; and

(4) equalization of services in all parts of the country, and for every citizen to have equal access to legal processes and all services, governmental and otherwise, that are required for the fulfilment of his or her real needs and aspirations; and

(5) equal participation by women citizens in all political, economic, social and religious activities; and

(6) the maximization of the number of citizens participating in every aspect of development; and

(7) active steps to be taken to facilitate the organization and legal recognition of all groups engaging in development activities; and

(8) means to be provided to ensure that any citizen can exercise his personal creativity and enterprise in pursuit of fulfilment that is consistent with the common good, and for no citizen to be deprived of this opportunity because of the predominant position of another; and

(9) every citizen to be able to participate, either directly or through a representative, in the consideration of any matter affecting his interests or the interests of his community; and

(10) all persons and governmental bodies of Papua New Guinea to ensure that, as far as possible, political and official bodies are so composed as to be broadly representative of citizens from the various areas of the country; and

(11) all persons and governmental bodies to endeavour to achieve universal literacy in Pisin, Hiri Motu, or English, and in "tok ples" or "ita eda tano gado"; and

(12) recognition of the principles that a complete relationship in marriage rests on equality of rights and duties of the partners, and that responsible parenthood is based on that equality.

3. - NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY AND SELF-RELIANCE

We declare our third goal to be for Papua New Guinea to be politically and economically independent, and our economy basically self-reliant.

WE ACCORDINGLY CALL FOR -

(1) our leaders to be committed to these National Goals and Directive Principles, to ensure that their freedom to make decisions is not restricted by obligations to or relationship with others, and to make all of their decisions in the national interest; and

(2) all governmental bodies to base their planning for political, economic and social development on these Goals and Principles; and
(3) internal interdependence and solidarity among citizens, and between provinces, to be actively promoted; and

(4) citizens and governmental bodies to have control of the bulk of economic enterprise and production; and

(5) strict control of foreign investment capital and wise assessment of foreign ideas and values so that these will be subordinate to goal of national sovereignty and self-reliance and in particular for the entry of foreign capital to be geared to internal social and economic policies and to the integrity of the Nation and the People; and

(6) the State to take effective measures to control and actively participate in the national economy, and in particular to control major enterprises engaged in the exploitation of natural resources; and

(7) economic development to take place primarily by the use of skills and resources available in the country either from citizens or the State and not in dependence on imported skills and resources; and

(8) the constant recognition of our sovereignty, which must not be undermined by dependence on foreign assistance of any sort, and in particular for no investment, military or foreign aid agreement or understanding to be entered into that imperils our self-reliance and self-respect, or our commitment to these National Goals and Directive Principles, or that may lead to substantial dependence upon or influence by any country, investor, lender or donor.

4. - NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT.

We declare our fourth goal to be for Papua New Guinea's natural resources and environment to be conserved and used for the collective benefit of us all, and be replenished for the benefit of future generations.

WE ACCORDINGLY CALL FOR -

(1) wise use to be made of our natural resources and the environment in and on the land or seabed, in the sea, under the land, and in the air, in the interests of our development and in trust for future generations; and

(2) the conservation and replenishment, for the benefit of ourselves and posterity, of the environment and its sacred, scenic and historical qualities; and

(3) all necessary steps to be taken to give adequate protection to our valued birds, animals, fish, insects, plants and trees.

5. - PAPUA NEW GUINEAN WAYS.

We declare our fifth goal to be to achieve development primarily through the use of Papua New Guinean forms of socials political and economic organization.

WE ACCORDINGLY CALL FOR -

(1) a fundamental re-orientation of our attitudes and the institutions of government, commerce, education and religion towards Papua New Guinean forms of participation, consultation and consensus, and a continuous renewal of the responsiveness of these institutions to the needs and attitudes of the People; and

(2) particular emphasis in our economic developments be placed on small-scale artisan, service business activity; and

(3) recognition that the cultural, commercial and ethnic diversity of our people is a positive strength, and for the fostering of a respect for, and appreciation of, traditional ways of life and culture, including language, in all their richness and variety, as well as for a willingness to apply these ways dynamically and creatively for the tasks of development; and

(4) traditional villages and communities to remain as viable units of Papua New Guinean society, and for active steps to be taken to improve their cultural, social, economic and ethical quality

Basic Rights.

WE HEREBY ACKNOWLEDGE that, subject to any restrictions imposed by law on non-citizens, all persons in our country are entitled to the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual, that is to say, the right, whatever their race, tribe, places of origin, political opinion, colour, creed or sex, but subject to respect for the rights and freedoms of others and for the legitimate public interest, to each of the following:

(a) life, liberty, security of the person and the protection of the law; and

(b) the right to take part in political activities; and

(c) freedom from inhuman treatment and forced labour; and

(d) freedom of conscience, of expression, of information and of assembly and association; and

(e) freedom of employment and freedom of movement; and

(f) protection for the privacy of their homes and other property and from unjust deprivation of property, and have accordingly included in this Constitution provisions designed to afford protection to those rights and freedoms, subject to such limitations on that protection as are contained in those provisions, being limitations primarily designed to ensure that the enjoyment of the acknowledged rights and freedoms by an individual does not prejudice the rights and freedoms of others or the legitimate public interest.

Basic Social Obligations.

WE HEREBY DECLARE that all persons in our country have the following basic obligations to themselves and their descendants, to each other, and to the Nation:

(a) to respect, and to act in the spirit of, this Constitution; and

(b) to recognize that they can fully develop their capabilities and advance their true interests only by active participation in the development of the national community as a whole; and
(c) to exercise the rights guaranteed or conferred by this Constitution, and to use the opportunities made available to them under it to Participate fully in the government of the Nation; and

(d) to protect Papua New Guinea and to safeguard the national wealth, resources and environment in the interests not only of the present generation but also of future generations; and

(e) to work according to their talents in socially useful employment, and if necessary to create for themselves legitimate opportunities for such employment; and

(f) to respect the rights and freedoms of others, and to co-operate fully with others in the interests of interdependence and solidarity; and

(g) to contribute, as required by law, according to their means to the revenues required for the advancement of the Nation and the purposes of Papua New Guinea; and

(h) in the case of parents, to support, assist and educate their children (whether born in or out of wedlock), and in particular to give them a true understanding of their basic rights and obligations and of the National Goals and Directive Principles; and

(i) in the case of the children, to respect their parents.

IN ADDITION, WE HEREBY DECLARE that all citizens have an obligation to themselves and their descendants, to each other and to the Nation to use profits from economic activities in the advancement of our country and our people, and that the law may impose a similar obligation on non-citizens carrying on economic activities in or from our country.

PART 111 - BASIC PRINCIPLES OF GOVERNMENT (part thereof)

Division 3. - Basic Rights

Subdivision A. - Introductory.

32. - RIGHT TO FREEDOM

(1) Freedom based on law consists in the least amount of restriction on the activities of individuals that is consistent with the maintenance and development of Papua New Guinea and of society in accordance with this Constitution and, in particular, with the National Goals and Directive Principles and the Basic Social Obligations.

(2) Every person has the right to freedom based on law, and accordingly has a legal right to do anything that -

(a) does not injure or interfere with the rights and freedoms of others; and

(b) is not prohibited by law, and no person -

(c) is obliged to do anything that is not required by law; and
(d) may be prevented from doing anything that complies with the provisions of paragraphs (a) and (b)

(3) This section is not intended to reflect on the extra-legal existence, nature, or effect of social, civic, family or religious obligations, or other obligations of an extra-legal nature, or to prevent such obligations being given effect to by law.

33. - OTHER RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS, ETC.

Nothing in this Division derogates the rights and freedoms of the individual under any other law and, in particular, an Organic Law or an Act of the Parliament may provide further guarantees of rights and freedoms and may further restrict the limitations that may be placed on, or on the exercise of, any right or freedom (including the limitations that may be imposed under Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights)).

34. - APPLICATION OF DIVISION 3.

Subject to this Constitution, each provision of this Division applies, as far as may be -
(a) as between individuals as well as between governmental bodies and individuals; and
(b) to and in relation to corporations and associations (other than governmental bodies) in the same way as it applies to and in relation to individuals, except where, or to the extent that the contrary intention appears in this Constitution.

Subdivision B. - Fundamental Rights.

35. - RIGHT TO LIFE.

(1) No person shall be deprived of his life intentionally except -
(a) in execution of a sentence of a court following his conviction of an offence for which the penalty of death is prescribed by law; or
(b) as the result of the use of force to such an extent is reasonable in the circumstances of the case and is permitted by any other law -
(i) for the defence of any person from violence; or
(ii) in order to effect a lawful arrest or to prevent the escape of a person lawfully detained; or
(iii) for the purpose of suppressing riot, an insurrection or a mutiny; or
(iv) in order to prevent him from committing an offence; or
(v) for the purpose of suppressing piracy or terrorism or similar acts; or
(c) as the result of a lawful act of war.

(2) Nothing in Subsection (1)(b) relieves any person from any liability at law in respect of the killing of another.
36. - FREEDOM FROM INHUMAN TREATMENT.

(1) No person shall be submitted to torture (whether physical or mental), or to treatment or punishment that is cruel or otherwise inhuman, or is inconsistent with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person.

(2) The killing of a person in circumstances in which Section 35(1)(a) (right to life) does not, of itself contravene Subsection (1), although the manner or the circumstances of the killing may contravene it.

37. - PROTECTION OF THE LAW.

(1) Every person has the right to the full protection of the law and the succeeding provisions of this section are intended to ensure that that right is fully available, especially to persons in custody or charged with offences.

(2) Except, subject to any Act of the Parliament the contrary, in the case of the offence commonly known as contempt of court, nobody may be convicted of an offence that is not defined by, and the penalty for which is not prescribed by, a written law.

(3) A person charged with an offence shall, unless the charge is withdrawn, be afforded a fair hearing within a reasonable time, by an independent and impartial court.

(4) A person charged with an offence -

(a) shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law, but a law may place upon a person charged with an offence the burden of proving particular facts which are, or would with the exercise of reasonable care be, peculiarly within his knowledge; and

(b) shall be informed promptly in a language which the offence with which he is charged; and

(c) shall be given adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence; and

(d) shall be permitted to have without payment the assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used at the trial of the charge; and

(e) shall be permitted to defend himself before the court in person or, at his own expense, by a legal representative of his own choice, or if he is a person entitled to legal aid, by the Public Solicitor or another legal representative assign to him in accordance with law; and

(f) shall be afforded facilities to examine in person or by his legal representative the witnesses called before the court by the prosecution, and to obtain the attendance and carry out the examination of witnesses and to testify before the court on his own behalf, on the same conditions as those applying to witnesses called by the prosecution.

(5) Except with his own consent, the trial shall not take place in his absence unless he so conducts himself as to render the continuance of the proceedings in his presence impracticable, and the court orders him to be removed and the trial to proceed in his absence, but provision may be made by law for a charge that a person has committed an offence the maximum penalty for which does not include imprisonment, (except in default of payment of a fine), to be heard summarily in his absence if it is established that he has been duly served with a summons in respect of the alleged offence.

(6) Nothing in Subsection (4)(f) invalidates a law which imposes reasonable conditions that must be satisfied if witness called to testify on behalf of a person charged with an offence are to be paid their expenses out of public funds.

(7) No person shall be convicted of an offence on account of any act that did not, at the time it took place, constitute an offence, and no penalty shall be imposed for an offence that is more severe in degree or description than the maximum penalty that might have been imposed for the offence at the time it was committed.

(8) No person who shows that he has been tried by a competent court for an offence and has been convicted or acquitted shall again be tried for that offence or for any other offence of which he could have been convicted at the trial for that offence, except upon the order of a superior court made in the course of appeal or review proceedings relating to the conviction or acquittal.

(9) No person shall be tried for an offence for which he has been pardoned.

(10) No person shall be compelled in the trial of an offence to be witness against himself.

(11) A determination of the existence or extent of a civil right or obligation shall not be made except by an independent and impartial court or other authority prescribed by law or agreed upon by the parties, and proceedings for such a determination shall be fairly heard within a reasonable time.

(12) Except with the agreement of the parties, or by order of the court in the interests of national security, proceedings in any jurisdiction of a court and proceedings for the determination of the existence or extent of any civil right or obligation before any other authority, including the announcement of the decision of the court or other authority, shall be held in public.

(13) Nothing in Subsection (12) prevents a court or other authority from excluding from the hearing of the proceedings before it persons, other than the parties and their legal representatives, to such an extent as the court or other authority -

(a) is by law empowered to do and considers necessary or expedient in the interests of public welfare or in circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice, the welfare of persons under voting age or the protection of the private lives of persons concerned in the proceedings; or

(b) is by law empowered or required to do in the interests of defence, public safety or public order.

(14) In the event that the trial of a person is not commenced within four months of the date on which he was committed for trial, a detailed report concerning the case shall be made by the Chief Justice to the Minister responsible for the National Legal Administration.

(15) Every person convicted of an offence is entitled to have his conviction and sentence reviewed by a higher court or tribunal according to law.

(16) No person shall be deprived by law of a right of appeal against his conviction or sentence by any court that existed at the time of the conviction or sentence, as the case may be.
(17) All persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person.

(18) Accused persons shall be segregated from convicted persons and shall be subject to separate treatment appropriate to their status as unconvicted persons.

(19) Persons under voting age who are in custody in connexion with an offence or alleged offence shall be separated from other persons in custody and be accorded treatment appropriate to their age.

(20) An offender shall not be transferred to an area away from that in which his relatives reside except for reasons of security or other good cause and, if such a transfer is made, the reason for so doing shall be endorsed on the file of the offender.

(21) Nothing in this section -
   (a) derogates Division III.4 (principles of natural justice) or
   (b) affects the powers and procedures of village courts.

(22) Notwithstanding Subsection 21(b) powers and procedures of village courts shall be exercised in accordance with the principles of natural justice.

Subdivision C. - Qualified Rights.

General.

38. - GENERAL QUALIFICATIONS ON QUALIFIED RIGHTS.

(1) For the purposes of this Subdivision, a law that complies with the requirements of this section is a law that is made and certified in accordance with Subsection (2), and that -

(a) regulates or restricts the exercise of a right or freedom referred to in this Subdivision to the extent that the regulation or restriction is necessary -
   (i) taking account of the National Goals and Directive Principles and the Basic Social Obligations, for the purpose of giving effect to the public interest in -
      (A) defence; or
      (B) public safety; or
      (C) public order; or
      (D) public welfare; or
      (E) public health (including animal and plant health); or
      (F) the protection of children and persons under his disability (whether legal or practical); or
      (G) the development of under-privileged or less advanced groups or areas; or
   (ii) in order to protect the exercise of the rights and freedoms of others; or
(b) makes reasonable provision for cases where the exercise of one such right may conflict with the exercise of another, to the extent that the law is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society having a proper respect for the rights and dignity of mankind.

(2) For the purposes of Subsection (1), a law must -

(a) be expressed to be a law that is made for that purpose; and

(b) specify the right or freedom that it regulates or restricts; and

(c) be made, and certified by the Speaker in his certificate under Section 110 (certification as to making of laws) to have been made, by an absolute majority.

(3) The burden of showing that a law is a law that complies with the requirements of Subsection (1) is on the party relying on its validity.

39. - "REASONABLY JUSTIFIABLE IN A DEMOCRATIC SOCIETY", ETC.

(1) The question, whether a law or act is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society having a proper regard for the rights and dignity of mankind, is to be determined in the light of the circumstances obtaining at the time when the decision on the question is made.

(2) A law shall not be declared not to be reasonably justifiable in a society having a proper regard for the rights and dignity of mankind except by the Supreme Court or the National Court, or any other court prescribed for the purpose by or under an Act of the Parliament, and unless the court is satisfied that the law was never so justifiable such a declaration operates as a repeal of the law as at the date of the declaration.

(3) For the purposes of determining whether or not any law, matter or thing is reasonably justified in a democratic society that has a proper regard for the rights and dignity of mankind, a court may have regard to -

(a) the provisions of this Constitution generally and especially the National Goals and Directive Principles and the Basic Social Obligations; and

(b) the Charter of the United Nations: and

(c) the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and any other declaration, recommendation or decision of the General Assembly of the United Nations concerning human rights and fundamental freedoms; and

(d) the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and the Protocols thereto, and any other international conventions, agreements or declaration, concerning human rights and fundamental freedoms; and

(e) judgements, reports and opinions of the International Court of Justice, the European Commission of Human Rights, the European Court of Human Rights and other international courts and tribunals dealing with human rights and fundamental freedoms; and

(f) previous laws, practices and Judicial decisions and opinions in the country; and

(g) laws, practices and judicial decisions and opinions in other countries; and
(h) the Final Report of the Pre-Independence Constitutional Planning Committee dated 13 August 1974 and presented to the pre-Independence House of Assembly on 16 August 1974, as affected by decisions of that House on the report and by decisions of the Constituent Assembly on the draft of this Constitution; and

(i) declarations by the International Commission of Jurists and other similar organizations;

(j) any other material that the court considers relevant.

40. - VALIDITY OF EMERGENCY LAWS.

Nothing in this Part invalidates an emergency law as defined in Part X (emergency powers), but nevertheless so far as is consistent with their purposes and terms all such laws shall be interpreted and applied so as not to affect or derogate a right or freedom referred to in this Division to an extent that is more than is reasonably necessary to deal with the emergency concerned and matters arising out of it, but only so far as is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society having a proper regard for the rights and dignity of mankind.

41. - PROSCRIBED ACTS.

(1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any other provision of any law, any act that is done under a valid law but in the particular case -

(a) is harsh or oppressive; or

(b) is not warranted by, or is disproportionate to, the requirements of the particular circumstances or of the particular case; or

(c) is otherwise not, in the particular circumstances, reasonably justifiable in a democratic society having a proper regard for the rights and dignity of mankind, is an unlawful act.

(2) The burden of showing that Subsection (1)(a), (b) or (c) applies in respect of an act is on the party alleging it, and may be discharged on the balance of probabilities.

(3) Nothing in this section affects the operation of any other law under which an act may be held to be lawful or invalid.

Rights of All Persons.

42. - LIBERTY OF THE PERSON.

(1) No person shall be deprived of his personal liberty except -

(a) in consequence of his unfitness to plead to a criminal charge; or

(b) in the execution of the sentence or order of a court in respect of an offence of which he has been found guilty, or in the execution of the order of a court of record punishing him for contempt of itself or another court or tribunal; or
(c) by reason of his failure to comply with the order of a court made to secure the fulfilment of an obligation (other than a contractual obligation) imposed upon him by law; or

(d) upon reasonable suspicion of his having committed, or being about to commit, an offence; or

(e) for the purpose of bringing him before a court in execution of the order of a court; or

(f) for the purpose of preventing the introduction or spread of a disease or suspected disease, whether of humans, animals or plants, or for normal purposes of quarantine; or

(g) for the purpose of preventing the unlawful entry of a person into Papua New Guinea, or for the purpose of effecting the expulsion, extradition or other lawful removal of a person from Papua New Guinea, or the taking of proceedings for any of those purposes; or

(h) in the case of a person who is, or is reasonably suspected of being of unsound mind -

   (i) or addicted to drugs or alcohol, for the purpose of his care or treatment or the protection of the community, under an order of a court;

   or

   (ii) for the purpose of taking prompt legal proceedings to obtain an order of a court of a type referred to in Subparagraph (i).

(2) A person who is arrested or detained -

   (a) shall be informed promptly, in a language that he understands, of the reasons for his arrest or detention and of any charge against him; and

   (b) shall be permitted whenever practicable to communicate without delay and in private with a member of his family or a personal friend, and with a lawyer of his choice (including the Public Solicitor if he is entitled to legal aid); and

   (c) shall be given adequate opportunity to give instructions to a lawyer of his choice in the place in which he is detained, and shall be informed immediately on his arrest of his rights under this subsection.

(3) A person who is arrested or detained -

   (a) for the purpose of being brought before a court in the execution of an order of a court; or

   (b) upon reasonable suspicion of his having committed, or being about to commit, an offence, shall, unless he is released, be brought without delay before a court or a judicial officer and, in a case referred to in paragraph (b) shall not be further held in custody in connexion with the offence except by order of a court or judicial officer.

(4) The necessity or desirability of interrogating the person concerned or other persons, or any administrative requirement or convenience, is not a good ground for failing to comply... with Subsection (3), but exigencies of travel which in the circumstances are reasonable may, without derogating any other protection available to the person concerned, be such a ground.

(5) Where a complaint is made to the National Court or a Judge that a person is unlawfully or unreasonably detained -

(a) the National Court or Judge shall inquire into the complaint and order the person concerned to be brought before it or him; and

(b) unless the court or Judge is satisfied that the detention is lawful, and in the case of a person being detained on remand pending his trial does not constitute an unreasonable detention having regard, in particular, to its length, the Court or a Judge shall order his release either unconditionally or subject to such conditions as the Court or Judge thinks fit.

(6) A person arrested or detained for an offence (other than treason or wilful murder as defined by an Act of the Parliament) is entitled to bail at all times from arrest or detention to acquittal or conviction unless the interests of justice otherwise require.

(7) Where a person to whom Subsection (6) applies is refused bail -

(a) the court or person refusing bail shall, on request by the person concerned or his representative, state in writing the reason for the refusal; and

(b) the person or his representative may apply to the Supreme Court or the National Court in a summary manner for his release.

(8) Subject to any other law, nothing in this section applies in respect of any reasonable act of the parent or guardian of a child, or a person into whose care a child has been committed, in the course of the education, discipline or upbringing of the child.

(9) Subject to any Constitutional Law or Act of the Parliament, nothing in this section applies in respect of a person who is in custody under the law of another country -

(a) while in transit through the country; or

(b) permitted by or under an Act of the Parliament made for the purposes of Section 206 (visiting forces).

43. - FREEDOM FROM FORCED LABOUR.

(1) No person shall be required to perform forced labour.

(2) In Subsection (1), "forced labour" does not include -

(a) labour required by the sentence or order of a court; or

(b) labour required of a person while in lawful custody, being labour that, although not required by the sentence or order of a court, is necessary for the hygiene of, or for the maintenance of, the place in which he is in custody; or

(c) in the case of a person in custody for the purpose of his care, treatment, rehabilitation or welfare, labour reasonably required for that purpose; or

(d) labour required of a member of a disciplined force in pursuance of his duties as such a member; or
(e) subject to the approval of any local government body for the area in which he is required to work, labour reasonably required as part of reasonable and normal communal or other civic duties; or

(f) labour of a reasonable amount and kind (including, in the case of compulsory military service, labour required as an alternative to such service in the case of a person who has conscientious objections to military service) that is required in the national interest by an Organic Law that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights).

44. - FREEDOM FROM ARBITRARY SEARCH AND ENTRY.

No person shall be subjected to the search of his person or property or to entry of his premises, except to the extent that the exercise of that right is regulated or restricted by a law -

(a) that makes reasonable provision for a search or entry -

(i) under an order made by a court; or

(ii) under a warrant for a search issued by a court or judicial officer on reasonable grounds, supported by oath or affirmation, Particularly describing the purpose of the search; or

(iii) that authorizes a public officer or government agent of Papua New Guinea or an officer of a body corporate established by law for a public purpose to enter, where necessary on the premises of a person in order to inspect those premises or anything in or on them in relation to any rate or tax or in order to carry out work connected with any property that is lawfully in or on those premises and belongs to the Government or any such body corporate; or

(iv) that authorizes the inspection of goods, premises, vehicles, ships or aircraft to ensure compliance with lawful requirements as to the entry of persons or importation of goods into Papua New Guinea or departure of persons or exportation of goods from Papua New Guinea or as to standards of safe construction, public safety, public health, permitted use or similar matters, or to secure compliance with the terms of a licence to engage in manufacture or trade; or

(v) for the purpose of inspecting or taking copies of documents relating to -

(A) the conduct of a business, trade, profession or industry in accordance with a law regulating the conduct of that business, trade, profession or industry; or

(B) the affairs of a company in accordance with a law relating to companies; or

(vi) for the purpose of inspecting goods or inspecting or taking copies of documents, in connexion with the collection, or the enforcement of payment of taxes or under a law prohibiting or restricting the importation of goods into Papua New Guinea or the exportation of goods from Papua New Guinea; or

(b) that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights)
45. - FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE, THOUGHT AND RELIGION.

(1) Every person has the right to freedom of conscience, thought and religion and the practice of his religion and beliefs, including freedom to manifest and propagate his religion and beliefs in such a way as not to interfere with the freedom of others, except to the extent that the exercise of that right is regulated or restricted by a law that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights).

(2) No person shall be compelled to receive religious instruction or to take part in a religious ceremony or observance, but this does not apply to the giving of religious instruction to a child with the consent of his parent or guardian or to the inclusion in a course of study of secular instruction concerning any religion or belief.

(3) No person is entitled, to intervene unsolicited into the religious affairs of a person of different belief, or to attempt to force his or any religion (or irreligion) on another, by harassment or otherwise.

(4) No person may be compelled to take an oath that is contrary to his religion or belief, or to take an oath in a manner or form that is contrary to his religion or belief.

(5) A reference in this section to religion includes reference to the traditional religious beliefs and customs of the peoples of Papua New Guinea.

46. - FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION.

(1) Every person has the right to freedom of expression and publication, except to the extent that the exercise of that right is regulated or restricted by law -

(a) that imposes reasonable restrictions on public office-holders; or

(b) that imposes restrictions on non-citizens; or

(c) that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights).

(2) In Subsection (1), "freedom of expression and publication" includes -

(a) freedom to hold opinions, to receive ideas and information and to communicate ideas and information, whether to the public generally or to a person or class of persons;

(b) freedom of the press and other mass communications media.

(3) Notwithstanding anything in this section, an Act of the Parliament may make reasonable provision for securing reasonable access to mass communications media for interested persons and associations -

(a) for the communication of ideas and information; and

(b) to allow rebuttal of false or misleading statements concerning their acts, ideas or beliefs, and generally for enabling and encouraging freedom of expression.

47. - FREEDOM OF ASSEMBLY AND ASSOCIATION.

(1) Every person has the right peacefully to assemble and associate and to form or belong to, or not to belong to, political parties, industrial organizations or other associations, except to the extent that the exercise of that right is regulated or restricted by a law -
(a) that takes reasonable provision in respect of the registration of all or any associations; or
(b) that imposes reasonable restrictions on public office-holders; or
(c) that imposes restrictions on non-citizens; or
(d) that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights).

48. - FREEDOM OF EMPLOYMENT

(1) Every person has the right to freedom of choice of employment in any calling for which he has the qualifications (if any) lawfully required, except to the extent that that freedom is related or restricted voluntarily or by a law that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights) or a law that imposes restrictions on non-citizens.

(2) Subsection (1) does not prohibit reasonable action or provision for the encouragement of persons to join industrial organizations or for requiring membership of an industrial organization for any purpose.

49. - RIGHT TO PRIVACY.

Every person has the right to reasonable privacy in respect of his private and family life, his communications with other persons and his personal papers and effects, except to the extent that the exercise of that right is regulated or restricted by a law that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights).

Special Rights of Citizens.

50. - RIGHT TO VOTE AND STAND FOR PUBLIC OFFICE.

(1) Subject to the express limitations imposed by this Constitution, every citizen who is of full capacity and has reached voting age, other than a person who -

(a) is under sentence of death or imprisonment for a period of more than nine months; or
(b) has been convicted, within the period of three years next preceding the first day of the polling period for the election concerned, of an offence relating to elections that is prescribed by an Organic Law or an Act of the Parliament for the purposes of this paragraph, has the right, and shall be given a reasonable opportunity -

(c) to take part in the conduct of public affairs, either directly or through freely chosen representatives; and
(d) to vote for, and to be elected to, elective public office at genuine, periodic, free elections; and
(e) to hold public office and to exercise public functions.
(2) The exercise of those rights may be regulated by a law that is reasonably justifiable for the purpose in a democratic society that has a proper regard for the rights and dignity of mankind.

51. - RIGHT TO FREEDOM OF INFORMATION.

(1) Every citizen has the right of reasonable access to official documents, subject only to the need for such secrecy as is reasonably, justifiable in a democratic society in respect of -

(a) matters relating to national security, defence or international relations of Papua New Guinea (including Papua New Guinea’s relations with the Government of any other country or with any international organization); or

(b) records of meetings and decisions of the National Executive Council and of such executive bodies and elected governmental authorities as are prescribed by Organic Law or Act of the Parliament; or

(c) trade secrets, and privileged or confidential commercial or financial information obtained from a person or body; or

(d) parliamentary papers the subject of parliamentary privilege; or

(e) reports, official registers and memoranda prepared by governmental authorities or authorities established by government, prior to completion; or

(f) papers relating to lawful official activities for investigation and prosecution of crime; or

(g) the prevention, investigation and prosecution of crime; or

(h) the maintenance of personal privacy and security of the person; or

(i) matters contained in or related to reports prepared by, on behalf of or for the use of a governmental authority responsible for the regulation or supervision of financial institutions; or

(j) geological or geophysical information and data concerning wells and ore bodies.

(2) A law that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights) may regulate or restrict the right guaranteed by this section.

(3) Provision shall be made by law to establish procedures by which citizens may obtain ready access to official information.

(4) This section does not authorize -

(a) withholding information or limiting the availability of records to the public except in accordance with its provisions; or

(b) withholding information from the Parliament.

52. - RIGHT TO FREEDOM OF MOVEMENT.

(1) Subject to Subsection (3), no citizen may be deprived of the right to move freely throughout the country, to reside in any part of the country and to enter and leave the country, except in consequence of a law that provides for deprivation of personal liberty in accordance with Section 42 (liberty of the person).
(2) No citizen shall be expelled or deported from the country except by virtue of an order of a court made under a law in respect of the extradition of offenders, or alleged offenders, against the law of some other place.

(3) A law that complies with Section 38 (general qualifications on qualified rights) may regulate or restrict the exercise of the right referred to in Subsection (1), and in particular may regulate or restrict the freedom of movement of persons convicted of offences and of members of a disciplined force.

53. - PROTECTION FROM UNJUST DEPRIVATION OF PROPERTY.

(1) Subject to Subsection 54 (special provision in relation to certain lands) and except as permitted by this section, possession may not be compulsorily taken of any property, and no interest in or right over property may be compulsorily acquired, except in accordance with Organic Law or an Act of the Parliament, and unless -

(a) the property is required for -

(i) a public purpose; or

(ii) a reason that is reasonably justified in a democratic society that has a proper regard for the rights and dignity of mankind, that is so declared and so described, for the purposes of this section, in an Organic Law or an Act of the Parliament; and

(b) the necessity for the taking of possession or acquisition for the attainment of that purpose or for that reason is such as to afford reasonable justification for the causing of any resultant hardship to any person affected.

(2) Subject to this section, just compensation must be made on just terms by the expropriating authority, giving full weight to the National Goals and Directive Principles and having due regard to the national interest and to the expression of that interest by the Parliament, as well as to the person affected.

(3) For the purposes of Subsection (2), compensation shall not be deemed not to be just and on just terms solely by reason of a fair provision for deferred payment, payment by instalments or compensation otherwise than in cash.

(4) In this section, a reference to the taking of possession of property, or the acquisition of an interest in or right over property includes reference to -

(a) the forfeiture; or

(b) the extinction or determination (otherwise than by way of a reasonable provision for the limitation of actions or reasonable law in the nature of prescription or adverse possession), of any right or interest in property.

(5) Nothing in the preceding provisions of this section prevents -

(a) the taking of possession of property, or the acquisition of an interest in or right over property, that is authorized by any other provision of this Constitution; or

(b) any taking of possession or acquisition -
(i) in consequence of an offence or attempted offence against, or breach or attempted breach of, or other failure to comply with a law or

(ii) in satisfaction of a debt or civil obligation or

(iii) subject to Subsection (6), where the property is or may be required as evidence in proceedings or possible proceedings before court or tribunal, in accordance with a law that is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society that has a proper regard for the rights and dignity of mankind; or

(c) any taking of possession or acquisition that was an incident of the grant or acceptance of, or of any interest in or right over, that property or any other property by the holder or any of his predecessors in title; or

(d) any taking of possession or acquisition that is in accordance with custom; or

(e) any taking of possession or acquisition of ownerless or abandoned property (other than customary land); or

(f) any restriction on the use of or on dealing with property or any interest in or right over any property that is reasonably necessary for the preservation of the environment or of the national cultural inheritance.

(6) Subsection (5)(b)(iii) does not authorize the retention of any property after the end of the period for which its retention is reasonably required for the purpose referred to in that paragraph.

(7) Nothing in the preceding provisions of this section applies to or in relation to the property of any person who is not a citizen and the power to compulsorily take possession of, or to acquire an interest in, or right over, the property of any such person shall be as provided for by an Act of the Parliament.

54. - SPECIAL PROVISION IN RELATION TO CERTAIN LANDS.

Nothing in Section 37 (protection of the law) or 53 (protection from unjust deprivation of property) invalidates a law that is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society that has a proper regard for human rights and that provides -

(a) for the recognition of the claimed title of Papua New Guinea to land where -

   (i) there is a genuine dispute as to whether the land was acquired validly or at all from the customary owners before Independence Day; and

   (ii) if the land were acquired compulsorily the acquisition would comply with Section 53(1) (protection from unjust deprivation of property); or

(b) for the settlement by extra-judicial means of disputes as to the ownership of customary land that appear not to be capable of being reasonably settled in practice by judicial means; or

(c) for the prohibition or regulation of the holding of certain interests in, or in relation to, some or all land by non-citizens.
55. - EQUALITY OF CITIZENS.

(1) Subject to this Constitution, all citizens have the same rights, privileges, obligations and duties irrespective of race, tribe, place of origin, political opinion, colour, creed, religion or sex.

(2) Subsection (1) does not prevent the making of laws for the special benefit, welfare, protection or advancement of females, children and young persons, members of under-privileged or less advanced groups or residents of less advanced areas.

(3) Subsection (1) does not affect the operation of a pre-Independence law.

56. - OTHER RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES OF CITIZENS.

(1) Only citizens may -

(a) vote in elections for, or hold, elective public offices; or
(b) acquire freehold land.

(2) An Act of the Parliament may -

(a) define the offices that are to be regarded as elective public offices; and
(b) define the forms of ownership that are to be regarded as freehold; and
(c) define the corporations that are to be regarded as citizens, for the purposes of Subsection (1).

(3) An Act of the Parliament may make further provision for rights and privileges to be reserved for citizens.

Subdivision D. - Enforcement.

57. - ENFORCEMENT OF GUARANTEED RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS.

(1) A right or freedom referred to in this Division shall be protected by, and is enforceable in, the Supreme Court or the National Court or any other court prescribed for the purpose by an Act of the Parliament, either on its own initiative or on application by any person who has an interest in its protection and enforcement, or in the case of a person who is, in the opinion of the court, unable fully and freely to exercise his rights under this section by a person acting on his behalf, whether or not by his authority.

(2) For the purposes of this section -

(a) the Law Officers of Papua New Guinea; and
(b) any other persons prescribed for the purpose by an Act of the Parliament; and
(c) any other persons with an interest (whether personal or not) in the maintenance of the principles commonly known as the Rule of Law such that, in the opinion of the court concerned, they ought to be allowed to appear and be heard on the matter in question, have an interest in the protection and enforcement of the rights and freedoms referred to in this Division, but this subsection does not limit the persons or classes of persons who have such an interest.

(3) A court that has jurisdiction under Subsection (1) may make all such orders and declarations as are necessary or appropriate for the purposes of this section, and may make an order or declaration in relation to a statute at any time after it is made (whether or not it is in force).

(4) Any court, tribunal or authority may, on its own initiative or at the request of a person referred to in, Subsection (1), adjourn, or otherwise delay a decision, in any proceedings before it in order to allow a question concerning the effect or application of this Division to be determined in accordance with Subsection (1).

(5) Relief under this section is not limited to cases of actual or imminent infringement of the guaranteed rights and freedoms, but may, if the court thinks it proper to do so, be given in cases in which there is a reasonable probability of infringement, or in which an action that a person reasonably desires to take is inhibited by the likelihood of, or a reasonable fear of, an infringement.

(6) The jurisdiction and powers of the courts under this section are in addition to, and not in derogation of, their jurisdiction and powers under any other provision of this Constitution.

58. - COMPENSATION.

(1) This section is in addition to, and not in derogation of, Section 57 (enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms).

(2) A person whose rights or freedoms declared or protected by, this Division are infringed including any infringement caused by a derogation of the restrictions specified in Part X.5 (internment) on the use of emergency powers in relation to internment is entitled to reasonable damages and, if the court thinks it proper, exemplary damages in respect of the infringement responsible for, the infringement.

(3) Subject to Subsections (4) and (5), damages may be awarded against any person who committed, or was responsible for, the infringement.

(4) Where the infringement was committed by a governmental body, damages may be awarded either -

(a) subject to Subsection (5), against a person referred to in Subsection (3); or

(b) against the governmental body to which any such person was responsible, or against both, in which last case the court may apportion the damages between them.

(5) Damages shall not be awarded against a person who was responsible to a governmental body in respect of the action giving rise to the infringement if -

(a) the action was an action made unlawful only by Section 41(1) (Proscribed acts); and

(b) the action taken was genuinely believed by that person to be required by law, but the burden of proof of the belief referred to in paragraph (b) is on the party alleging it.
Division 4. - Principles of Natural Justice.

59. - PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL JUSTICE.

   (1) Subject to this Constitution and to any statute, the principles of natural justice are the rules of the underlying law known by that name developed for control of judicial and administrative proceedings.

   (2) The minimum requirement of natural justice is the duty to act fairly and, in principle, to be seen to act fairly.

60. - DEVELOPMENT OF PRINCIPLES.

   In the development of the rules of the underlying law in accordance with Sch. 2 (Adoption, etc., of certain laws) particular attention shall be given to the development of a system of principles of natural justice and of administrative law specifically designed for Papua New Guinea, taking special account of the National Goals and Directive Principles and of the Basic Social Obligations, and also of typically Papua New Guinean procedures and forms of organization.

61 - BASIC RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS.

   For the avoidance of doubt, it is hereby declared that nothing in the preceding provisions of this Division derogates any of the rights and freedoms provided for by Division 3 (basic rights).

62. - DECISIONS IN "DELIBERATE JUDGEMENT".

   (1) Where a law provides or allows for an act to be done in the "deliberate judgement" of a person, body or authority, the principles of natural justice apply only to the extent that the exercise of judgement must not be biased, arbitrary or capricious.

   (2) Except -

      (a) to the extent provided for by Subsection (1); and

      (b) in accordance with Section 155(5) (the National Judicial System); and

      (c) provided by a Constitutional Law or an Act of the Parliament, an act to which Subsection (1) applies is, to the extent to which it is done in the deliberate judgement of the person concerned non-justiciable.

Division 5. - Basic Social Obligations.

63. - ENFORCEMENT OF THE BASIC SOCIAL OBLIGATIONS.

   (1) Except to the extent provided in Subsections (3) and (4), the Basic Social Obligations are non-justiciable.
(2) Nevertheless, it is the duty of all governmental bodies to encourage compliance with them as far as lies within their respective powers.

(3) Where any law, or any power conferred or duty imposed by any law (whether the power or duty be of legislative, judicial, executive, administrative or other kind), can reasonably be understood, applied, exercised, complied with or enforced, without failing to give effect to the intention of the Parliament or to this Constitution, in such a way as to enforce or encourage compliance with the Basic Social Obligations, or at least not to derogate them, it is to be understood, applied, exercised, complied with or enforced in that way.

(4) Subsection (1) does not apply in the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman Commission or other body prescribed for the purposes of Division III.2 (leadership code), which shall take the Basic Social Obligations fully into account in all cases as appropriate.
APPENDIX 7

Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948
UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS, 1948.

Preamble

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Whereas disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people,

Whereas it is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law,

Whereas it is essential to promote the development of friendly relations between nations,

Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter reaffirmed faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Whereas Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in co-operation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Whereas a common understanding of these rights and freedoms is of the greatest importance for the full realization of this pledge.

Now, Therefore,

The General Assembly

proclaims

This universal declaration of human rights as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction.

Article 1

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.

Article 2

Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

Furthermore, no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty.
Article 3
Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person.

Article 4
No one shall be held in slavery or servitude: slavery and the slave trade shall be prohibited in all their forms.

Article 5
No one shall be subjected to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 6
Everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

Article 7
All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.

Article 8
Everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted him by the constitution or by law.

Article 9
No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.

Article 10
Everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, in the determination of his rights and obligations and of any criminal charge against him.

Article 11
1. Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence.

2. No one shall be held guilty of any penal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offence, under national or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the offence was committed.

Article 12
No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

Article 13
1. Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each state.

2. Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.
Article 14

1. Everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution.

2. This right may not be invoked in the case of prosecutions genuinely arising from non-political crimes or from acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 15

1. Everyone has the right to a nationality.

2. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality.

Article 16

1. Men and women of full age, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion, have the right to marry and to found a family. They are entitled to equal rights as to marriage, during marriage and its dissolution.

2. Marriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of intending spouses.

3. The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.

Article 17

1. Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.

2. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Article 18

3. These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 30

Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein.
APPENDIX 8

European Convention on

Human Rights and its Protocols
THE EUROPEAN CONVENTION ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND ITS PROTOCOLS

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe,

    Considering that this Declaration aims at securing the universal and effective recognition and observance of the Rights therein declared;

    Considering that the aim of the Council of Europe is the achievement of greater unity between its Members and that one of the methods by which the aim is to be pursued is the maintenance and further realization of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms;

    Reaffirming their profound belief in those Fundamental Freedoms which are the foundation of justice and peace in the world and are best maintained on the one hand by an effective political democracy and on the other by understanding and observance of the Human Rights upon which they depend;

    Being resolved, as the Governments or European countries which are like-minded and have a common heritage of political traditions, ideals, freedom and the rule of law to take the first steps for the collective enforcement of certain of the Rights stated in the Universal Declaration;

    Have agreed as follows:

Article 1
The High Contracting Parties shall secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the rights and freedoms defined in Section 1 of this Convention.

Section I

Article 2
1. Everyone's right to life shall be protected by law. No one shall be deprived of his life intentionally save in the execution of a sentence of a court following his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law.

2. Deprivation of life shall not be regarded as inflicted in contravention of when it results from the use of force which is no more than absolutely necessary:
   (a) in defence of any person from unlawful violence;
   (b) in order to effect a lawful arrest or to prevent the escape of a person lawfully detained
   (c) in action lawfully taken for the purpose of quelling a riot or insurrection.

Article 3
No one shall subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 4
1. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
2. No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.

3. For the purpose of this Article the term 'forced or compulsory labour' shall not include:
   (a) any work required to be done in the ordinary course of detention imposed according to the provisions of Article 5 of this Convention or during conditional release from such detention;
   (b) any service of a military character or, in case of conscientious objectors in countries where they are recognized, service exacted instead of compulsory military service;
   (c) any service exacted in case of an emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community;
   (d) any work or service which forms part of normal civic obligations.

Article 5

1. Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be deprived of his liberty save in the following cases and in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law;
   (a) the lawful detention of a person after conviction by a court;
   (b) the lawful arrest or detention of a person for non-compliance with the lawful order of a court or in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation prescribed by law;
   (c) the lawful arrest or detention of a person effected for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his committing an offence or fleeing after having done so;
   (d) the detention of a minor by lawful order for the purpose of educational supervision or his lawful detention for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority;
   (e) the lawful detention of persons for the prevention of the spreading of infectious diseases, of persons of unsound mind, alcoholics or drug addicts, or vagrants;
   (f) the lawful arrest or detention of a person to prevent his effecting an unauthorized entry into the country or of a person against whom action is being taken with a view to deportation or extradition.

2. Everyone who is arrested shall be informed promptly, in a language in which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and any charge against him.

3. Everyone arrested or detained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 (c) of this Article shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorized by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial. Release may be conditioned by guarantees to appear for trial.

4. Everyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not lawful.

5. Everyone who has been the victim of arrest or detention in contravention of the provisions of this article shall have an enforceable right to compensation.
Article 6

1. In the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law. Judgment shall be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interest of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice.

2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.

3. Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights:

   (a) to be informed promptly, in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him;

   (b) have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence;

   (c) to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing or, if he has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance, to be given it free when the interests of justice so require;

   (d) to examine or have examined witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;

   (e) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court.

Article 7

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed.

2. This article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations.

Article 8

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.

2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Article 9

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and either alone or in community with others and in
2. Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Article 10

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.

2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.

Article 11

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

2. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This Article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State.

Article 12

Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to found a family, according to the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

Article 13

Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.

Article 14

The enjoyment of the rights and freedoms set forth in this Convention shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.
Article 15

1. In time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation any High Contracting Party may take measures derogating from its obligations under this Convention to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, provided that such measures are not inconsistent with its other obligations under international law.

2. No derogation from Article 2, except in respect of deaths resulting from lawful acts of war, or from Articles 3, 4 (paragraph 1) and 7 shall be made under this provision.

3. Any High Contracting Party availing itself of this right of derogation shall keep the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe fully informed of the measures which it has taken and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe when such measures have ceased to operate and the provisions of the Convention are again being fully executed.

Article 16

Nothing in Articles 10, 11 and 14 shall be regarded as preventing the High Contracting Parties from imposing restrictions on the political activity of aliens.

Article 17

Nothing in this Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention.

Article 18

The restrictions permitted under this Convention to the said rights and freedoms shall not be applied for any purpose other than those for which they have been prescribed.

Section II

Article 19

To ensure the observance of the engagements undertaken by the Contracting Parties in the present Convention, there shall be set up:

1. A European Commission of Human Rights hereinafter referred to as 'the Commission';

2. A European Court of Human Rights, hereinafter referred to as 'the Court'.

Section III

Article 20

The Commission shall consist of a number of members equal to that of the High Contracting Parties. No two members of the Commission may be nationals of the same State.

Article 21

1. The members of the Commission shall be elected by the Committee of Ministers by an absolute majority of votes, from a list of names drawn up by the Bureau of the Consultative Assembly; each group of the Representatives of the High Contracting Parties in the Consultative Assembly shall put forward three candidates, of whom two at least shall be its nationals.

2. As far as applicable, the same procedure shall be followed to complete the Commission in the event of other States subsequently becoming Parties to this Convention, and in filling casual vacancies.

Article 22

1. The members of the Commission shall be elected for a period of six years. They may be re-elected. However, of the members elected at the first election, the terms of seven members shall expire at the end of three years.

2. The members whose terms are to expire at the end of the initial period of three years shall be chosen by lot by the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. A member of the Commission elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

4. The members of the Commission shall hold office until replaced. After having been replaced, they shall continue to deal with such cases as they already have under consideration.

Article 23

The members of the Commission shall sit on the Commission in their individual capacity.

Article 24

Any High Contracting Party may refer to the Commission, through the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, any alleged breach of the provisions of the Convention by another High Contracting Party.

Article 25

1. The Commission may receive petitions addressed to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe from any person, non-governmental organization or group of individuals claiming to be the victim of a violation by one of the High Contracting Parties of the rights set forth in this Convention, provided that the High Contracting Party against which the complaint has been lodged has declared that it recognizes the competence of the Commission to receive such petitions. Those of the High Contracting Parties who have made such a declaration undertake not to hinder in any way the effective exercise of this right.

2. Such declarations may be made for a specific period.

3. The declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe who shall transmit copies thereof to the High Contracting Parties and publish them.

4. The Commission shall only exercise the powers provided for in this Article when at least six High Contracting Parties are bound by declarations made in accordance with the preceding paragraphs.

Article 26

The Commission may only deal with the matter after all domestic remedies have been exhausted, according to the generally recognized rules of international law, and within a period of six months from the date on which the final decision was taken.
Article 27

1. The Commission shall not deal with any petition submitted under Article 25 which
   (a) is anonymous, or
   (b) is substantially the same as a matter which has already been examined by the Commission or has already been submitted to another procedure or international investigation or settlement and if it contains no relevant new information.

2. The Commission shall consider inadmissible any petition submitted under Article 25 which it considers incompatible with the provisions of the present Convention, manifestly ill-founded, or an abuse of the petition.

3. The Commission shall reject any petition referred to it which it considers inadmissible under Article 26.

Article 28

In the event of the Commission accepting a petition referred to it:
   (a) it shall, with a view to ascertaining the facts undertake together with the representatives of the parties an examination of the petition and, if need be, an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the States concerned shall furnish all necessary facilities, after an exchange of views with the Commission:
   (b) it shall place itself at the disposal of the parties concerned with a view to securing a friendly settlement of the matter on the basis of respect for Human Rights as defined in this Convention.

Article 29

1. The Commission shall perform the functions set out in Article 28 by means of a Sub-Commission consisting of seven members of the Commission.

2. Each of the parties concerned may appoint as members of this Sub-Commission a person of its choice.

3. The remaining members shall be chosen by lot in accordance with arrangements

Article 30

If the Sub-Commission succeeds in effecting a friendly settlement in accordance with Article 28, it shall draw up a Report which shall be sent to the States concerned, to the Committee of Ministers and to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe for publication.
This Report shall be confined to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached.

Article 31

1. If a solution is not reached, the Commission shall draw up a Report on the facts and state its opinion as to whether the facts found disclose a breach the State concerned of its obligations under the Convention. The opinions of all the members of the Commission on this point may be stated in the Report.

2. The Report shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers. It shall also be transmitted to the States concerned, who shall not be at liberty to publish it.
3. In transmitting the Report to the Committee of Ministers the Commission may make such proposals as it thinks fit.

Article 32

1. If the question is not referred to the Court in accordance with Article 48 of this Convention within a period of three months from the date of the transmission of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, the Committee of Ministers shall decide by a majority of two-thirds of the members entitled to sit on the Committee whether there has been a violation of the Convention.

2. In the affirmative case the Committee of Ministers shall prescribe a period during which the Contracting Party concerned must take the measures required by the decision of the Committee of Ministers.

3. If the High Contracting Party concerned has not taken satisfactory measures within the prescribed period, the Committee of Ministers shall decide by the majority provided for in paragraph 1 above what effect shall be given to its original decision and shall publish the Report.

4. The Contracting Parties undertake to regard as binding on them any decision which the Committee of Ministers may take in application of the preceding paragraphs.

Article 33

The Commission shall meet in camera.

Article 34

The Commission shall take its decision by a majority of the Members present and voting; the Sub-Commission shall take its decisions by a majority of its members.

Article 35

The Commission shall meet as the circumstances require. The meetings shall be convened by the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.

Article 36

The Commission shall draw up its own rules of procedure.

Article 37

The secretariat of the Commission shall be provided by the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.

Section IV

Article 38

The European Court of Human Rights shall consist of a number of judges equal to that of the Members of the Council of Europe. No two judges may be nationals of the same State.

Article 39

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the Consultative Assembly by a majority of the votes cast from a list of persons nominated by the Members of the Council of Europe; each Member shall nominate three candidates, of whom two at least shall be its nationals.
2. As far as applicable, the same procedure shall be followed to complete the Court in the event of the admission of new members of the Council of Europe, and in filling casual vacancies.

3. The candidates shall be of high moral character and must either possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office or be jurisconsults of recognized competence.

Article 40

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for a period of nine years. They may be re-elected. However, of the members elected at the first election the terms of four members shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of four more members shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The members whose terms are to expire at the end of the initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

4. The members of the Court shall hold office until replaced. After having been replaced, they shall continue to deal with such cases as they already have under consideration.

Article 41

The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for a period of three years. They may be re-elected.

Article 42

The members of the Court shall receive for each day of duty a compensation to be determined by the Committee of Ministers.

Article 43

For the consideration of each case brought before it the Court shall consist of a Chamber composed of seven judges. There shall sit as an ex officio member of the Chamber the judge who is a national of any State party, or, if there is none, a person of its choice who shall sit in the capacity of judge; the names of the other judges shall be chosen by lot by the President before the opening of the case.

Article 44

Only the High Contracting Parties and the Commission shall have the right to bring a case before the Court.

Article 45

The jurisdiction of the Court shall extend to all cases concerning the interpretation and application of the present Convention which the High Contracting Parties or the Commission shall refer to it in accordance with Article 48.

Article 46

1. Any of the High Contracting Parties may at any time declare that it recognizes as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement the jurisdiction of the Court in all matters concerning the interpretation and application of the present Convention.
2. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity, on the part of several or certain other High Contracting Parties or for a specified period.

3. These declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe who shall transmit copies thereof to the High Contracting Parties.

Article 47

The Court may only deal with a case after the Commission has acknowledged the failure of efforts for a friendly settlement and within the period of three months provided for in Article 32.

Article 48

The following may bring a case before the Court, provided that the High Contracting Party concerned, if there is only one, or the High Contracting Parties concerned, if there is more than one, are subject to the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court or, failing that, with the consent of the High Contracting Party concerned, if there is only one, or of the High Contracting Parties concerned if there is more than one:

(a) the Commission;
(b) a High Contracting Party whose national is alleged to be a victim;
(c) a High Contracting Party which referred the case to the Commission;
(d) a High Contracting Party against which the complaint has been lodged.

Article 49

In the event of dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 50

If the Court finds that a decision or a measure taken by a legal authority or any other authority of a High Contracting Party, is completely or partially in conflict with the obligations arising from the present Convention and if the internal law of the said Party allows only partial reparation to be made for the consequences of this decision or measure, the decision of the Court shall, if necessary, afford just satisfaction to the injured party.

Article 51

1. Reasons shall be given for the judgment of the Court.

2. If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 52

The judgment of the Court shall be final.

Article 53

The High Contracting Parties undertake to abide by the decision of the Court in any case to which they are parties.
Article 54
The judgment of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers which shall supervise its execution.

Article 55
The Court shall draw up its own rules and shall determine its own procedure.

Article 56
1. The first election of the members of the Court shall take place after the declarations by the High Contracting Parties mentioned in Article 46 have reached a total of eight.
2. No case can be brought before the Court before this election.

Section V

Article 57
On receipt of a request from the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe any Contracting Party shall furnish an explanation of the manner in which its internal law ensures the effective implementation of any of the provisions of this Convention.

Article 58
The expenses of the Commission and the Court shall be borne by the Council of Europe.

Article 59
The members of the Commission and of the Court shall be entitled, during the discharge of their functions, to the privileges and immunities provided for in Article 40 of the Statute of the Council of Europe and in the agreements made thereunder.

Article 60
Nothing in this Convention shall be construed as limiting or derogating from any of the human rights and fundamental freedoms which may be ensured under the laws of any High Contracting Party or under any other agreement to which it is a Party.

Article 61
Nothing in this Convention shall prejudice the powers conferred on the Committee of Ministers by the Statute of the Council of Europe.

Article 62
The High Contracting Parties agree that, except by special agreement they will not avail themselves of treaties, conventions or declarations in force between them for the purpose of submitting, by way of petition, a dispute arising out of the interpretation or application of this Convention to a means of settlement other than those provided for in this Convention.

Article 63
1. Any State may at the time of its ratification or at any time thereafter declare by notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe that the present Convention shall extend to all or any of the territories for whose international relations it is responsible.
2. The Convention shall extend to the territory or territories named in the notification as from the thirtieth day after the receipt of this notification by the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.

3. The provisions of this Convention shall be applied in such territories with due regard, however, to local requirements.

4. Any State which has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article may at any time thereafter declare on behalf of one or more of the territories to which the declaration relates that it accepts the competence of the Commission to receive petitions from individuals, non-governmental organizations or groups of individuals in accordance with Article 25 of the present Convention.

Article 64

1. Any State may, when signing this Convention or when depositing its instrument of ratification, make a reservation in respect of any particular provision of the Convention to the extent that any law then in force in its territory is not in conformity with the provision. Reservations of a general character shall not be permitted under this article.

2. Any reservation made under this article shall contain a brief statement of the law concerned.

Article 65

1. A High Contracting Party may denounce the present Convention only after the expiry of five years from the date of which it became a Party to it and after six months' notice contained in a notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, who shall inform the other High Contracting Parties.

2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the High Contracting Party concerned from its obligations under this Convention in respect of any act which, being capable of constituting a violation of such obligations, may have been performed by it before the date at which the denunciation became effective.

3. Any High Contracting Party which shall cease to be a Member of the Council of Europe shall cease to be a Party to this Convention under the same conditions.

4. The Convention may be denounced in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraphs in respect of any territory to which it has been declared to extend under the terms of Article 63.

Article 66

1. This Convention shall be open to the signature of the Members of the Council of Europe. It shall be ratified. Ratifications shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.

2. The present Convention shall come into force after the deposit of ten instruments of ratification.

3. As regards any signatory ratifying subsequently, the Convention shall come into force at the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

4. The Secretary-General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the Members of the Council of Europe of the entry into force of the Convention, the names of the High Contracting Parties who have ratified it, and the deposit of all instruments of ratification which may be effected subsequently.

Done at Rome this 4th day of November, 1950, in English and French, being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary-General shall transmit certified copies to each of the signatories.

Protocols

1. Enforcement of certain Rights and Freedoms not included in Section I of the Convention.

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe,

Being resolved to take steps to ensure the collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms other than those already included in Section I of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4th November, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'),

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and general principles of international law.

The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties.

Article 2

No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions.

Article 3

The High Contracting Parties undertake to hold free elections at reasonable intervals by secret ballot, under conditions which will ensure the free expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of the legislature.

Article 4

Any High Contracting Party may at the time of signature or ratification or at any time thereafter communicate to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe a declaration stating the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of the present Protocol shall apply to such of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible as are named therein.

Any High Contracting Party which has communicated a declaration in virtue of the preceding paragraph may from time to time communicate a further declaration modifying the terms of any former declaration or terminating the application of the provisions of this Protocol in respect of any territory.
A declaration made in accordance with this article shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 63 of the Convention.

Article 5

As between the High Contracting Parties the provisions of Articles 1, 2, 3 and 4 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional articles to the Convention and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Article 6

This Protocol shall be open for signature by the Members of the Council of Europe, who are the signatories of the Convention; it shall be ratified at the same time as or after the ratification of the Convention. It shall enter into force after the deposit of ten instruments of ratification. As regards any signatory ratifying subsequently, the Protocol shall enter into force at the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

The instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, who will notify all Members of the names of those who have ratified.

Done at Paris on the 20th day of March 1952, in English and French, both texts being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary-General shall transmit certified copies to each of the signatory Governments.

2. Conferring upon the European Court of Human Rights competence to give Advisory Opinions

The member States of the Council of Europe signatory hereto:

Having regard to the provisions of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'), and in particular Article 19 instituting, among other bodies, a European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter referred to as 'the Court');

Considering that it is expedient to confer upon the Court competence to give advisory opinions subject to certain conditions;

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

1. The Court may, at the request of the Committee of Ministers, give advisory opinions on legal questions concerning the interpretation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto.

2. Such opinions shall not deal with any question relating to the content or scope of the rights or freedoms defined in Section I of the Convention and in the Protocols thereto, or with any other question which the Commission, the Court, or the Committee of Ministers might have to consider in consequence of any such proceedings as could be instituted in accordance with the Convention.

3. Decisions of the Committee of Ministers to request an advisory opinion shall require a two-thirds majority vote of the representatives entitled to sit on the Committee.
Article 2

The Court shall decide whether a request for an advisory opinion submitted by the Committee of Ministers is within its consultative competence as defined in Article 1 of this Protocol.

Article 3

1. For the consideration of requests for an advisory opinion, the Court shall sit in plenary session.

2. Reasons shall be given for advisory opinions of the Court.

3. If the advisory opinion does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

4. Advisory opinions of the Court shall be communicated to the Committee of Ministers.

Article 4

The powers of the Court under Article 55 of the Convention shall extend to the drawing up of such rules and the determination of such procedure as the Court may think necessary for the purposes of this Protocol.

Article 5

1. This Protocol shall be open to signature by Member States of the Council of Europe, signatories to the Convention, who may become Parties to it by:

   (a) signature without reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance;

   (b) signature with reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance followed by ratification or acceptance. Instruments of ratification or acceptance shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.

2. This Protocol shall enter into force as soon as all the States Parties Convention shall have become Parties to the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article.

3. From the date of the entry into force of this Protocol, Articles 1 to 4 shall be considered an integral part of the Convention.

4. The Secretary-General of the Council of Europe shall notify the Member States of the Council of:

   (a) any signature without reservation in respect of ratification of acceptance;

   (b) any signature with reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance;

   (c) the deposit of any instrument of ratification or acceptance;

   (d) the date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with paragraph 2 of this Article.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto have signed this Protocol.

Done at Strasbourg, this 6th day of May 1963, in English and in French both texts being equally authoritative, in a single copy which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary-General shall transmit certified copies to each of the signatory States.
3. Amending Articles 29, 30, and 94 of the Convention

The member States of the Council of Europe, signatories to this Protocol,

Considering that it is advisable to amend certain provisions of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4 November 1960 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention') concerning the procedure of the European Commission of Human Rights

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

1. Article 29 of the Convention is deleted.

2. The following provision shall be inserted in the Convention:

'Article 29

After it has accepted a petition submitted under Article 25, the Commission may nevertheless decide unanimously to reject the petition if, in the course of its examination, it finds that the existence of one of the grounds for non-acceptance provided for in Article 27 has been established.

In such a case, the decision shall be communicated to the parties.'

Article 2

In Article 30 of the Convention, the word 'Sub-Commission' shall be replaced by the word 'Commission'.

Article 3

1. At the beginning of Article 34 of the Convention, the following shall be inserted:

'Subject to the provisions of Article 29....'

2. At the end of the same article, the sentence 'the Sub-Commission shall take its decisions by a majority of its members' shall be deleted.

Article 4

1. The Protocol shall be open to signature by the member States of the Council of Europe, who may become Parties to it either by:

   (a) signature without reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance.; or

   (b) signature with reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance, followed by ratification or acceptance. Instruments of ratification or acceptance shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.

2. This Protocol shall enter into force as soon as all States Parties to the Convention shall have become Parties to the Protocol, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article.

3. The Secretary-General of the Council of Europe shall notify the Member States of the Council of:

   (a) any signature without reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance;

   (b) any signature with reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance;
(c) the deposit of any instrument of ratification or acceptance;
(d) the date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with paragraph 2 of this Article.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorised thereto, have signed this Protocol.

Done at Strasbourg, this 6th day of May 1963, in English and in French, both texts being equally authoritative, in a single copy which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary shall transmit certified copies to each of the signatory States.

4. Securing certain Rights and Freedoms other than those included in the Convention and in Protocol No. 1

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe.

Being resolved to take steps to ensure the collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms other than those already included in Section I of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention') and in Articles 1 to 3 of the First Protocol to the Convention, signed at Paris on 20 March 1952,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

No one shall be deprived of his liberty merely on the ground of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation.

Article 2

1. Everyone lawfully within the territory of a State shall, within that territory, have the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his residence.
2. Everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own.
3. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are in accordance with law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the maintenance of 'ordre public', for the prevention of crime, for the protection of health and morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.
4. The rights set forth in paragraph 1 may also be subject, in particular areas, to restrictions imposed in accordance with law and justified by the interest in a democratic society.

Article 3

1. No one shall be expelled, by means either of an individual or of a collective measure, from the territory of the State of which he is a national.
2. No one shall be deprived of the right to enter the territory of the State of which he is a national.

Article 4

Collective expulsion of aliens is prohibited.
Article 5

1. Any High Contracting Party may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Protocol, or at any time thereafter, communicate to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe a declaration stating the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of this Protocol shall apply to such of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible as are named therein.

2. Any High Contracting Party which has communicated a declaration in virtue of the preceding paragraph may, from time to time, communicate a further declaration modifying the terms of any former declaration or terminating the application of the provisions of this Protocol in respect of any territory.

3. A declaration made in accordance with this article shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 63 of the Convention.

4. The territory of any State to which this Protocol applies by virtue of ratification or acceptance by that State, and each territory to which this applied by virtue of a declaration by that State under this article, shall be treated as separate territories for the purpose of the references in Articles 2 and 3 to the territory of a State.

Article 6

1. As between the High Contracting Parties the provisions of Articles 1 to 5 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional articles to the Convention, and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

2. Nevertheless, the right of individual recourse recognized by a declaration made under Article 25 of the Convention, or the acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court by a declaration made under Article 46 of the Convention, shall not be effective in relation to this Protocol unless the High Contracting Party concerned has made a statement recognizing such right, or accepting such jurisdiction, in respect of all or any of Articles 1 to 4 of the Protocol.

Article 7

1. This Protocol shall be open for signature by the members of the Council of Europe who are the signatories of the Convention; it shall be ratified at the same time as or after the ratification of the Convention. It shall enter into force after the deposit of five instruments of ratification. As regards any signatory ratifying subsequently, the Protocol shall enter into force at the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

2. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, who will notify all members of the names of those who have ratified.

In witness thereof the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto, have signed this Protocol.

Done at Strasbourg, this 16th day of September 1963, in English and in French, both texts being equally authoritative, in a single copy which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary-General shall transmit certified copies to each of the signatory States.

5. Amending Articles 22 and 40 of the Convention

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe.
Considering that certain inconveniences have arisen in the application of the provisions of Articles 22 and 40 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4th November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention') relating to the length of the terms of office of the members of the European Commission of Human Rights (hereinafter referred to as 'the Commission') and of the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter referred to as the Court):

Considering that it is desirable to ensure as far as possible an election every three years of one half of the members of the Commission and of one-third of the members of the Court;

Considering therefore that it is desirable to amend certain provisions of the Convention,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1
In Article 22 of the Convention, the following two paragraphs shall be inserted after paragraph (2):

'(3) In order to ensure that, as far as possible, one half of the membership of the Commission shall be renewed every three years, the Committee of Ministers may decide, before proceeding to any subsequent election, that the term or terms of office of one or more members to be elected shall be for a period other than six years but not more than nine and not less than three years.

(4) In cases where more than one term of office is involved and the Committee of Ministers applies the preceding paragraph, the allocation of the terms of office shall be effected by the drawing of lots by the Secretary-General, immediately after the election.'

Article 2
In Article 22 of the Convention, the former paragraphs (3) and (4) shall become respectively paragraphs (5) and (6).

Article 3
In Article 40 of the Convention, the following two paragraphs shall be inserted after paragraph (2):

'(3) In order to ensure that, as far as possible, one third of the membership of the Court shall be renewed every three years, the Consultative Assembly may decide, before proceeding to any subsequent election, that the term or terms of office of one or more members to be elected shall be for a period other than nine years but not more than twelve and not less than six years.

(4) In cases where more than one term of office is involved and the Consultative Assembly applies the preceding paragraph, the allocation of the terms of office shall be effected by the drawing of lots by the Secretary-General immediately after the election.'

Article 4
In Article 40 of the Convention, the former paragraphs (3) and (4) shall become respectively paragraphs (5) and (6).

Article 5
1. This Protocol shall be open to signature by Members of the Council of Europe, signatories to the Convention, who may become Parties to it by:
(a) signature without reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance;
(b) signature with reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance, followed by ratification or acceptance.

Instruments of ratification or acceptance shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.

2. This Protocol shall enter into force as soon as all Contracting Parties to the Convention shall have become Parties to the Protocol, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article.

3. The Secretary-General of the Council of Europe shall notify the Members of the Council of:
   (a) any signature without reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance;
   (b) any signature with reservation in respect of ratification or acceptance;
   (c) the deposit of any instrument of ratification or acceptance;
   (d) the date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance of paragraph 2 of this Article.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto, have signed this Protocol.

Done at Strasbourg, this 20th day of January 1966, in English and in French, both texts being equally authoritative, in a single copy which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary-General shall transmit certified copies to each of the signatory Governments.

6. Concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty

The member States of the Council of Europe, signatory to this Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'),

Considering that the evolution that has occurred in several member States of the Council of Europe expresses a general tendency in favour of abolition of the death penalty;

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The death penalty shall be abolished. No one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed.

Article 2

A State may make provision in its law for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war; such penalty shall be applied only in the instances laid down in the law and in accordance with its provisions. The State shall communicate to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe the relevant provisions of that law.

Article 3

No derogation from the provisions of this Protocol shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention.
Article 4

No reservation may be made under Article 64 of the Convention in respect of the provisions of this Protocol.

Article 5

1. Any State may at the time of signature or when depositing its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, specify the territory or territories to which this Protocol shall apply.

2. Any State may at any later date, by a declaration addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, extend the application of this Protocol to any other territory specified in the declaration. In respect of such territory the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the date of receipt of such declaration by the Secretary General.

3. Any declaration made under the two preceding paragraphs may, in respect of any territory specified in such declaration, be withdrawn by notification addressed to the Secretary General. The withdrawal shall become effective on the first day of the month following the date of receipt of such notification by the Secretary General.

Article 6

As between the States Parties the provisions of Articles 1 to 5 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional articles to the Convention and all provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Article 7

This Protocol shall be open for signature by the member States of the Council of Europe, signatories to the Convention. It shall be subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. A member State of the Council of Europe may not ratify, accept or approve this Protocol unless it has, simultaneously or previously, ratified the Convention. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Article 8

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the date on which five member States of the Council of Europe have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 7.

2. In respect of any member State which subsequently expresses its consent to be bound by it, the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the date of the deposit of the instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

Article 9

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify the member States of the Council of:

(a) any signature;

(b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;

(c) any date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with articles 5 and 8;

(d) any other act, notification or communication relating to this Protocol.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorised thereto, have signed this Protocol.
Done at Strasbourg, this 28th day of April 1983, in English and French both texts being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall be deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall transmit certified copies to each member State of the Council of Europe.

7. Concerning Various Matters

The member States of the Council of Europe signatory hereto,

Being resolved to take further steps to ensure the collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms by means of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as ‘the Convention’),

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

1. An alien lawfully resident in the territory of a State shall not be expelled therefrom except in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with law and shall be allowed:

(a) to submit reasons against his expulsion,

(b) to have his case reviewed, and

(c) to be represented for these purposes before the competent authority or a person or persons designated by that authority.

2. An alien may be expelled before the exercise of his rights under paragraph 1.a, b and c of this Article, when such expulsion is necessary in the interests of public order or is grounded on reasons of national security.

Article 2

1. Everyone convicted of a criminal offence by a tribunal shall have the right to have his conviction or sentence reviewed by a higher tribunal. The exercise of this right, including the grounds on which it may be exercised shall be governed by law.

2. This right may be subject to exceptions in regard to offences of a minor character, as prescribed by law, or in cases in which the person concerned was tried in the first instance by the highest tribunal or was convicted following an appeal against acquittal.

Article 3

When a person has by a final decision been convicted of a criminal offence and when subsequently his conviction has been reversed, or he has been pardoned, on the ground that a new or newly discovered fact shows conclusively that there has been a miscarriage of justice, the person who has suffered punishment as a result of such conviction shall be compensated according to the law or the practice of the State concerned, unless it is proved that the nondisclosure of the unknown fact in time is wholly or partly attributable to him.

Article 4

1. No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings under the jurisdiction of the same State for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of that State.
2. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not prevent the re-opening of the case in accordance with the law and penal procedure of the State concerned, if there is evidence of new or newly discovered facts, or if there has been a fundamental defect in the previous proceedings, which could affect the outcome of the case.

3. No derogation from this Article shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention.

Article 5

Spouses shall enjoy equality of rights and responsibilities of a private law character between them, and in their relations with their children, as to marriage, during marriage and in the event of its dissolution. This Article shall not prevent States from taking such measures as are necessary in the interests of the children.

Article 6

1. Any State may at the time of signature or when depositing its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, specify the territory or territories to which this Protocol shall apply and state the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of this Protocol shall apply to such territory or territories.

2. Any State may at any later day, by a declaration addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, extend the application of this Protocol to any other territory specified in the declaration. In respect of such territory the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of two months after the date of receipt by the Secretary General of such declaration.

3. Any declaration made under the two preceding paragraphs may, in respect of any territory specified in such declaration, be withdrawn or modified by a notification addressed to the Secretary General. The withdrawal or modification shall become effective on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of two months after the date of such notification by the Secretary General.

4. A declaration made in accordance with this Article shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 63 of the Convention.

5. The territory of any State to which this Protocol applies by virtue of ratification, acceptance or approval by that State, and each territory to which this Protocol is applied by virtue of a declaration by that State under this Article, may be treated as separate territories for the purpose of the reference in Article 1 to the territory of a State.

Article 7

1. As between the States Parties, the provisions of Articles 1 to 6 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional Articles to the Convention, and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

2. Nevertheless, the right of individual recourse recognised by a declaration made under Article 25 of the Convention, or the acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court by a declaration made under Article 46 of the Convention, shall not be effective in relation to this Protocol unless the State concerned has made a statement recognising such right, or accepting such jurisdiction in respect of Articles 1 to 5 of this Protocol.

Article 8

This Protocol shall be open for signature by member States of the Council of Europe which have signed the Convention. It is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. A member State of the Council of Europe may not ratify, accept or approve this Protocol without previously or simultaneously ratifying the Convention. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Article 9

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of two months after the date on which seven member States of the Council of Europe have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 8.

2. In respect of any member State which subsequently expresses its consent to be bound by it, the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of two months after the date of the deposit of the instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

Article 10

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the member States of the Council of Europe of:

(a) any signature;

(b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;

(c) any date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Articles 6 and 9;

(d) any other act, notification or declaration relating to this Protocol.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorised thereto, have signed this Protocol.

Done at Strasbourg, this 22nd day of November 1984, in English and French both texts being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall be deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall transmit certified copies to each member State of the Council of Europe.

The member States of the Council of Europe, signatories to this Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as ‘the Convention’),

Considering that it is desirable to amend certain provisions of the Convention with a view to improving and in particular to expediting the procedure of the European Commission of Human Rights,

Considering that it is also advisable to amend certain provisions of the Convention concerning the procedure of the European Court of Human Rights.

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

1. The existing text of Article 20 of the Convention shall become paragraph 1 of that Article and shall be supplemented by the following four paragraphs:

‘2. The Commission shall sit in plenary session. It may, however, set up Chambers, each composed of at least seven members. The Chambers may examine petitions submitted under Article 25 of this Convention which can be dealt with on the basis of established case law or which raise no serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention. Subject to this restriction and to the provisions of paragraph 5 of this Article, the Chambers shall exercise all the powers conferred on the Commission by the Convention.

The member of the Commission elected in respect of a High Contracting Party against which a petition has been lodged shall have the right to sit on a Chamber to which that petition has been referred.

3. The Commission may set up committees, each composed of at least three members, with the power, exercisable by a unanimous vote to declare inadmissible or strike from its list of cases a petition submitted under Article 25, when such a decision can be taken without further examination.

4. A Chamber or committee may at any time relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the plenary Commission, which may also order the transfer to it of any petition referred to a Chamber or committee.

5. Only the plenary Commission can exercise the following powers:
   (a) the examination of applications submitted under Article 24;
   (b) the bringing of a case before the Court in accordance with Article 48a;
   (c) the drawing up of rules of procedure in accordance with Article 36.'

Article 2

Article 21 of the Convention shall be supplemented by the following third paragraph:

'3. The candidates shall be of high moral character and must either possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office or be persons of recognised competence in national or international law.'

Article 3

Article 23 of the Convention shall be supplemented by the following sentence:

'During their term of office they shall not hold any position which is incompatible with their independence and impartiality as members of the Commission or the demands of this office.'

Article 4

The text, with modifications, of Article 28 of the Convention shall become paragraph 1 of that Article and the text, with modifications, of Article 30 shall become paragraph 2. The new text of Article 28 shall read as

'Article 28

1. In the event of the Commission accepting a petition referred to it:
   (a) it shall, with a view to ascertaining the facts, undertake together with the representatives of the parties an examination of the petition if need be, an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the States concerned shall furnish all necessary facilities, after an exchange of views with the Commission;
(b) it shall at the same time place itself at the disposal of the parties concerned with a view to securing a friendly settlement of the matter on the basis of respect for Human Rights as defined in this Convention.

2. If the Commission succeeds in effecting a friendly settlement, it 'shall draw up a Report which shall be sent to the States concerned, to the Committee of Ministers and to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe for publication. This Report shall be confined to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached.'

Article 5

In the first paragraph of Article 29 of the Convention, the word 'unanimously' shall be replaced by the words 'by a majority of two-thirds of its members'.

Article 6

The following provision shall be inserted in the Convention:

'Article 30

1. The Commission may at any stage of the proceedings decide to strike a petition out of its list of cases where the circumstances lead to the conclusion that:

(a) the applicant does not intend to pursue his petition, or

(b) the matter has been resolved, or

(c) for any other reason established by the Commission, it is no longer justified to continue the examination of the petition.

However, the Commission shall continue the examination of a petition if respect for Human Rights as defined in this Convention so requires.

2. If the Commission decides to strike a petition out of its list after having accepted it, it shall draw up a Report which shall contain a statement of the facts and the decision striking out the petition together with the reasons therefor. The Report shall be transmitted to the parties, as well as to the Committee of Ministers for information. The Commission may publish it.

3. The Commission may decide to restore a petition to its list of cases if it considers that the circumstances justify such a course.'

Article 7

In Article 31 of the Convention, paragraph 1 shall read as follows:

'1. If the examination of a petition has not been completed in accordance with Article 28 (paragraph 2), 29 or 30, the Commission shall draw up a Report on the facts and state its opinion as to whether the facts found disclose a breach by the State concerned of its obligations under the Convention. The individual opinions of members of the Commission on this point may be stated in the Report.'

Article 8

Article 34 of the Convention shall read as follows:

'Subject to the provisions of Articles 20 (paragraph 3) and 29, the Commission shall take its decisions by a majority of the members present and voting.'
Article 9

Article 40 of the Convention shall be supplemented by the following seventh paragraph:

‘7. The members of the Court shall sit on the Court in their individual capacity. During their term of office they shall not hold any position which is incompatible with their independence and impartiality as members of the Court or the demands of this office.’

Article 10

Article 41 of the Convention shall read as follows:

‘The Court shall elect its President and one or two Vice-Presidents for a period of three years. They may be re-elected.’

Article 11

In the first sentence of Article 43 of the Convention, the word 'seven' shall be replaced by the word 'nine'.

Article 12

1. This Protocol shall be open for signature by member States of the Council of Europe signatories to the Convention, which may express their consent to be bound by:

   (a) signature without reservation as to ratification acceptance or approval, or
   (b) signature subject to ratification, acceptance or approval, followed by ratification, acceptance or approval.

2. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Article 13

This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date on which all Parties to the Convention have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 12.

Article 14

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify the member States of the Council of:

   (a) any signature:
   (b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;
   (c) the date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Article 13;
   (d) any other act, notification or communication relating to this Protocol.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorised thereto, have signed this Protocol.

Done at Vienna, this 19th day of March 1985, in English and French, both texts being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall be deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall transmit certified copies to each member State of the Council of Europe.
9. Concerning access to the Court by Individuals

The member States of the Council of Europe, signatories to this Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'),

Being resolved to make further improvements to the procedure under the Convention,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

For parties to the Convention which are bound by this Protocol, the Convention shall be amended as provided in Articles 2 to 5.

Article 2

Article 31, paragraph 2, of the Convention, shall read as follows:

'2. The Report shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers. The Report shall also be transmitted to the States concerned, and, if it deals with a petition submitted under Article 25, the applicant. The States concerned and the applicant shall not be at liberty to publish it.'

Article 3

Article 44 of the Convention shall read as follows:

'Only the High Contracting Parties, the Commission, and persons, non-governmental organisations or groups of individuals having submitted a petition under Article 25 shall have the right to bring a case before the Court.'

Article 4

Article 45 of the Convention shall read as follows:

'The jurisdiction of the Court shall extend to all cases concerning the interpretation and application of the present Convention which are referred to it in accordance with Article 48.'

Article 5

Article 48 of the Convention shall read as follows:

'1. The following may refer a case to the Court, provided that the High Contracting Party concerned, if there is only one, or the High Contracting Parties concerned, if there is more than one, are subject to the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court or, failing that, with the consent of the High Contracting Party concerned, if there is only one, or, of the High Contracting Parties concerned if there is more than one:

(a) the Commission;
(b) a High Contracting Party whose national is alleged to be a victim;
(c) a High Contracting Party which referred the case to the Commission;
(d) a High Contracting Party against which the complaint has been lodged;
(e) the person, non-governmental organisation or group of individuals having lodged the complaint with the Commission.'
2. If a case is referred to the Court only in accordance with paragraph i.e, it shall first be submitted to a panel composed of three members of the Court. There shall sit as an ex-officio member of the panel the judge who is elected in respect of the High Contracting Party against which the complaint has been lodged, or, if there is none, a person of its choice who shall sit in the capacity of judge. If the complaint has been lodged against more than one High Contracting Party, the size of the panel shall be increased accordingly.

If the case does not raise a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention and does not for any other reason warrant consideration by the Court, the panel may, by a unanimous vote, decide that it shall not be considered by the Court. In that event the Committee of Ministers shall decide, in accordance with the provisions of Article 32, whether there has been a violation of the Convention.

Article 6

1. This Protocol shall be open for signature by member States of the Council of Europe signatories to the Convention, which may express their consent to be bound by:

   (a) signature without reservation as to ratification, acceptance or approval; or
   (b) signature subject to ratification, acceptance or approval, followed by ratification, acceptance or approval.

2. The instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Article 7

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date on which ten member States of the Council of Europe have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 6.

2. In respect of any member State which subsequently expresses its consent to be bound by it, the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date of signature or of the deposit of the instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

Article 8

1. The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the member States of the Council of Europe of:

   (a) any signature;
   (b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;
   (c) any date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Article 7;
   (d) any other act, notification or declaration relating to this Protocol.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorised thereto, have signed this Protocol.

Done at Rome, this 6th day of November 1990, in English and French, both texts being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall be deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. 10. Concerning Various Matters (Provisional text)

The member States of the Council of Europe, signatories to this Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention').

Considering that it is advisable to amend Article 32 of the Convention with a view to the reduction of the two-thirds majority provided therein,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The words 'of two-thirds' shall be deleted from paragraph 1 of Article 32 of the Convention.

Article 2.

1. This Protocol shall be open for signature by member States of the Council of Europe signatories to the Convention, which may express their consent to be bound by:

   (a) signature without reservation as to ratification, acceptance or approval; or

   (b) signature subject to ratification, acceptance or approval followed by ratification, acceptance or approval.

2. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Article 3

This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date on which all Parties to the Convention have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 2.

Article 4

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify the member States of the Council of:

   (a) any signature;

   (b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;

   (c) the date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Article 3;

   (d) any other act, notification or communication relating to this Protocol.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorised thereto, have signed this Protocol.

Done at ... this ... day of......, in English and French, both texts being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall be deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall transmit certified copies to each member State of the Council of Europe.
APPENDIX 9

Relevant excerpts of the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1993:

[A.] CHAPTER 3 - FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND

[B.] SCHEDULE 4 - CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES
[A.] CHAPTER 3 Fundamental Rights

Application

7. (1) This Chapter shall bind all legislative and executive organs of state at all levels of government.

(2) This Chapter shall apply to all law in force and all administrative decisions taken and acts performed during the period of operation of this Constitution.

(3) Juristic persons shall be entitled to the rights contained in this Chapter where, and to the extent that, the nature of the rights permits.

(4) (a) When an infringement of or threat to any right entrenched in this Chapter is alleged, any person referred to in paragraph (b) shall be entitled to apply to a competent court of law for appropriate relief, which may include a declaration of rights.

(b) The relief referred to in paragraph (a) may be sought by—

(i) a person acting in his or her own interest;

(ii) an association acting in the interest of its members;

(iii) a person acting on behalf of another person who is not in a position to seek such relief in his or her own name:

(iv) a person acting as a member of or in the interest of a group or class of persons; or

(v) a person acting in the public interest.

Equality

8. (1) Every person shall have the right to equality before the law and to equal protection of the law.

(2) No person shall be unfairly discriminated against, directly or indirectly and without derogating from the generality of this provision, on one or more of the following grounds in particular: race, gender, sex, ethnic or social origin, colour, sexual orientation, age, disability, religion, conscience, belief, culture or language.

(3) (a) This section shall not preclude measures designed to achieve the adequate protection and advancement of persons or groups or categories of persons disadvantaged by unfair discrimination, in order to enable their full and equal enjoyment of all rights and freedoms.

(b) Every person or community dispossessed of rights in land before the commencement of this Constitution under any law which would have been inconsistent with subsection (2) had that subsection been in operation at the time of the dispossessio, shall be entitled to claim restitution of such rights subject to and in accordance with sections 121, 122 and 123.
(4) Prima facie proof of discrimination on any of the grounds specified in subsection (2) shall be presumed to be sufficient proof of unfair discrimination as contemplated in that subsection, until the contrary is established.

Life

9. Every person shall have the right to life.

Human dignity

10. Every person shall have the right to respect for and protection of his or her dignity.

Freedom and security of the person

11. (1) Every person shall have the right to freedom and security of the person, which shall include the right not to be detained without trial.

(2) No person shall be subject to torture of any kind, whether physical, mental or emotional, nor shall any person be subject to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Servitude and forced labour

12. No person shall be subject to servitude or forced labour.

Privacy

13. Every person shall have the right to his or her personal privacy, which shall include the right not to be subject to searches of his or her person, home or property, the seizure of private possessions or the violation of private communications.

Religion belief and opinion

14. (1) Every person shall have the right to freedom of conscience, religion, thought, belief and opinion, which shall include academic freedom in institutions of higher learning.

(2) Without derogating from the generality of subsection (1), religious observances may be conducted at state or state-aided institutions under rules established by an appropriate authority for that purpose, provided that such religious observances are conducted on an equitable basis and attendance at them is free and voluntary.

(3) Nothing in this Chapter shall preclude legislation recognising—

(a) a system of personal and family law adhered to by persons professing a particular religion; and

(b) the validity of marriages concluded under a system of religious law subject to specified procedures.

Freedom of expression

15. (1) Every person shall have the right to freedom of speech and expression, which shall include freedom of the press and other media, and the freedom of artistic creativity and scientific research.

(2) All media financed by or under the control of the state shall be regulated in a manner which ensures impartiality and the expression of a diversity of opinion.
Assembly, demonstration and petition

16. Every person shall have the right to assemble and demonstrate with others peacefully and unarmed, and to present petitions.

Freedom of association

17. Every person shall have the right to freedom of association.

Freedom or movement

18. Every person shall have the right to freedom of movement anywhere within the national territory.

Residence

19. Every person shall have the right freely to choose his or her place of residence anywhere in the national territory.

Citizens’ rights

20. Every citizen shall have the right to enter, remain in and leave the Republic, and no citizen shall without justification be deprived of his or her citizenship.

Political rights

21. (1) Every citizen shall have the right—

(a) to form, to participate in the activities of and to recruit members for a political party;

(b) to campaign for a political party or cause; and

(c) freely to make political choices.

(2) Every citizen shall have the right to vote, to do so in secret and to stand for election to public office.

Access to court

22. Every person shall have the right to have justiciable disputes settled by a court of law or, where appropriate, another independent and impartial forum.

Access to information

23. Every person shall have the right of access to all information held by the state or any of its organs at any level of government in so far as such information is required for the exercise or protection of any of his or her rights.

Administrative justice

24. Every person shall have the right to—

(a) lawful administrative action where any of his or her rights or interests is affected or threatened;

(b) procedurally fair administrative action where any of his or her rights or legitimate expectations is affected or threatened;

(c) be furnished with reasons in writing for administrative action which affects any of his or her rights or interests unless the reasons for such action have been made public; and
(d) administrative action which is justifiable in relation to the reasons given for it where any of his or her rights is affected or threatened.

Detained arrested and accused persons

25. (1) Every person who is detained, including every sentenced prisoner shall have the right—

(a) to be informed promptly in a language which he or she understands of the reason for his or her detention;

(b) to be detained under conditions consonant with human dignity, which shall include at least the provision of adequate nutrition, reading material and medical treatment at state expense;

(c) to consult with a legal practitioner of his or her choice, to be informed of this right promptly and where substantial injustice would otherwise result, to be provided with the services of a legal practitioner by the state;

(d) to be given the opportunity to communicate with, and to be visited by his or her spouse or partner next-of-kin, religious counsellor and a medical practitioner of his or her choice; and

(e) to challenge the lawfulness of his or her detention in person before a court of law and to be released if such detention is unlawful.

(2) Every person arrested for the alleged commission of an offence shall, in addition to the rights which he or she has as a detained person, have the right—

(a) promptly to be informed, in a language which he or she understands that he or she has the right to remain silent and to be warned of the consequences of making any statement;

(b) as soon as it is reasonably possible, but not later than 48 hours after the arrest or, if the said period of 48 hours expires outside ordinary court hours or on a day which is not a court day, the first court day after such expiry, to be brought before an ordinary court of law and to be charged or to be informed of the reason for his or her further detention, failing which he or she shall be entitled to be released;

(c) not to be compelled to make a confession or admission which could be used in evidence against him or her; and

(d) to be released from detention with or without bail, unless the interests of justice require otherwise.

(3) Every accused person shall have the right to a fair trial which shall include the right—

(a) to a public trial before an ordinary court of law within a reasonable time after having been charged;

(b) to be informed with sufficient particularity of the charge;

(c) to be presumed innocent and to remain silent during plea proceedings or trial and not to testify during trial;

(d) to adduce and challenge evidence and not to be a compellable witness against himself or herself;
(e) to be represented by a legal practitioner of his or her choice or, where substantial injustice would otherwise result, to be provided with legal representation at state expense, and to be informed of these rights;

(f) not to be convicted of an offence in respect of any act or omission which was not an offence at the time it was committed, and not to be sentenced to a more severe punishment than that which was applicable when the offence was committed;

(g) not to be tried again for any offence of which he or she has previously been convicted or acquitted;

(h) to have recourse by way of appeal or review to a higher court than the court of first instance;

(i) to be tried in a language which he or she understands or failing this to have the proceedings interpreted to him or her; and

(j) to be sentenced within a reasonable time after conviction.

Economic activity

26. (1) Every person shall have the right freely to engage in economic activity and to pursue a livelihood anywhere in the national territory.

(2) Subsection (1) shall not preclude measures designed to promote the protection or the improvement of the quality of life, economic growth, human development, social justice, basic conditions of employment, fair labour practices or equal opportunity for all, provided such measures are justifiable in an open and democratic society based on freedom and equality.

Labour relations

27. (1) Every person shall have the right to fair labour practices.

(2) Workers shall have the right to form and join trade unions, and employers shall have the right to form and join employers’ organisations.

(3) Workers and employers shall have the right to organise and bargain collectively.

(4) Workers shall have the right to strike for the purpose of collective bargaining.

(5) Employers’ recourse to the lock-out for the purpose of collective bargaining shall not be impaired, subject to section 33(1).

Property

28. (1) Every person shall have the right to acquire and hold rights in property and to the extent that the nature of the rights permits, to dispose of such rights.

(2) No deprivation of any rights in property shall be permitted otherwise than in accordance with a law.

(3) Where any rights in property are expropriated pursuant to a law referred to in subsection (2), such expropriation shall be permissible for public purposes only shall be subject to the payment of agreed compensation or, failing agreement, to the payment of such compensation and within such period as may be determined by a court of law as just and equitable, taking into account all relevant factors, including, in the case of the determination of compensation, the use to which the property is being put, the history of its acquisition, its market value, the value of the investments in it by those affected and the interests of those affected.

Environment

29. Every person shall have the right to an environment which is not detrimental to his or her health or well-being.

Children

30. (1) Every child shall have the right—
   (a) to a name and nationality as from birth;
   (b) to parental care;
   (c) to security, basic nutrition and basic health and social services;
   (d) not to be subject to neglect or abuse; and
   (e) not to be subject to exploitative labour practices nor to be required or permitted to perform work which is hazardous or harmful to his or her education, health or well-being.

   (2) Every child who is in detention shall, in addition to the rights which he or she has in terms of section 25, have the right to be detained under conditions and to be treated in a manner that takes account of his or her age.

   (3) For the purpose of this section a child shall mean a person under the age of 18 years and in all matters concerning such child his or her best interest shall be paramount

Language and culture

31. Every person shall have the right to use the language and to participate in the cultural life of his or her choice.

Education

32. Every person shall have the right—
   (a) to basic education and to equal access to educational institution;
   (b) to instruction in the language of his or her choice where this is reasonably practicable; and
   (c) to establish where practicable educational institutions based on a common culture, language or religion, provided that there shall be no discrimination on the ground of race.

Limitation

33. (1) The rights entrenched in this Chapter may be limited by law of general application, provided that such limitation—
   (a) shall be permissible only to the extent that it is—
   (i) reasonable; and
   (ii) justifiable in an open and democratic society based on freedom and equality; and
   (b) shall not negate the essential content of the right in question.
and provided further that any limitation to—

(aa) a right entrenched section 10, 11, 12, 14(1), 21, 25 or 30(1)(d) or (e) or (2); or

(bb) a right entrenched in section 15, 16, 17, 18, 23 or 24, in so far as such right relates to free and fair political activity, shall, in addition to being reasonable as required in paragraph (a)(i), also be necessary.

(2) Save as provided for in subsection (1) or any other provision of this Constitution, no law, whether a rule of the common law, customary law or legislation, shall limit any right entrenched in this Chapter.

(3) The entrenchment of the rights in terms of this Chapter shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights of freedoms recognised or conferred by common law, customary law or legislation to the extent that they are not inconsistent with this Chapter.

(4) This Chapter shall not preclude measures designed to prohibit unfair discrimination by bodies other than those bound in terms of section 7(1).

(5) (a) The provision of a law in force at the commencement of this Constitution promoting fair employment practices, orderly and equitable collective bargaining and the regulation of industrial action shall remain of full force and effect until repealed or amended by the legislature.

(b) If a proposed enactment amending or repealing a law referred to in paragraph (a) deals with a matter in respect of which the National Manpower Commission referred to in section 2A of the Labour Relations Act, 1956 (Act No.28 of 1956) or any other similar body which may replace the Commission, is competent in terms of a law then in force to consider and make recommendations, such proposed enactment shall not be introduced in Parliament unless the said Commission or such other body has been given an opportunity to consider the proposed enactment and to make recommendations with regard thereto.

State of emergency and suspension

34. (1) A state of emergency shall be proclaimed prospectively under an Act of Parliament, and shall be declared only where the security of the Republic is threatened by war, invasion, general insurrection or disorder or at a time of national disaster, and if the declaration of a state of emergency is necessary, to restore peace or order.

(2) The declaration of a state of emergency and any action taken, including any regulation enacted, in consequence thereof, shall be of force for a period of not more than 21 days, unless it is extended for a period of not longer than three months, or consecutive periods of not longer than three months at a time, by resolution of the National Assembly adopted by a majority of at least two-thirds of all its members.

(3) Any superior court shall be competent to enquire into the validity of a declaration of a state of emergency, any extension thereof, and any action taken, including any regulation enacted, under such declaration.

(4) The rights entrenched in this Chapter may be suspended only inconsequence of the declaration of a state of emergency, and only to the extent necessary to restore peace or order.

(5) Neither any law which provides for the declaration of a state of emergency, nor any action taken, including any regulation enacted, in consequence thereof, shall permit or authorise—
(a) the creation of retrospective crimes;
(b) the indemnification of the state or of persons acting under its authority for unlawful actions during the state of emergency; or
(c) the suspension of this section, and sections 7, 8(2), 9, 10, 11(2), 12, 14, 27(1) and (2), 30(1)(d) and (e) and (2) and 33(1) and (2).

(6) Where a person is detained under a state of emergency the detention shall be subject to the following conditions:

(a) An adult family member or friend of the detainee shall be notified of the detention as soon as is reasonably possible;

(b) the names of all detainees and a reference to the measures in terms of which they are being detained shall be published in the Gazette within five days of their detention;

(c) when rights entrenched in section 11 or 25 have been suspended—

(i) the detention of a detainee shall as soon as it is reasonably possible but not later than 10 days after his or her detention, be reviewed by a court of law, and the court shall order the release of the detainee if it is satisfied that the detention is not necessary to restore peace or order;

(ii) a detainee shall at any stage after the expiry of a period of 10 days after a review in terms of subparagraph (i) be entitled to apply to a court of law for a further review of his or her detention, and the court shall order the release of the detainee if it is satisfied that the detention is no longer necessary to restore peace or order;

(d) the detainee shall be entitled to appear before the court in person, to be represented by legal counsel, and to make representations against his or her continued detention;

(e) the detainee shall be entitled at all reasonable times to have access to a legal representative of his or her choice;

(f) the detainee shall be entitled at all times to have access to a medical practitioner of his or her choice; and

(g) the state shall for the purpose of a review referred to in paragraph (c) (i) or (ii) submit written reasons to justify the detention or further detention of the detainee to the court, and shall furnish the detainee, with such reasons not later than two days before the review.

(7) If a court of law, having found the grounds for a detainee's detention unjustified orders his or her release, such a person shall not be detained again on the same grounds unless the state shows good cause to a court of law prior to such re-detention.

Interpretation

35. (1) In interpreting the provisions of this Chapter a court of law shall promote the values which underlie an open and democratic society based on freedom and equality and shall, where applicable, have regard to public international law applicable to the protection of the rights entrenched in this Chapter, and may have regard to comparable foreign case law.
(2) No law which limits any of the rights entrenched in this Chapter, shall be constitutionally invalid solely by reason of the fact that the wording used prima facie exceeds the limits imposed in this Chapter, provided such a law is reasonably capable of a more restricted interpretation which does not exceed such limits in which event such law shall be construed as having a meaning in accordance with the said more restricted interpretation.

(3) In the interpretation of any law and the application and development of the common law and customary law, a court shall have due regard to the spirit, purport and objects of this Chapter.

[B.] SCHEDULE 4 Constitutional Principles

I

The Constitution of South Africa shall provide for the establishment of one sovereign state, a common South African citizenship and a democratic system of government committed to achieving equality between men and women and people of all races.

II

Everyone shall enjoy all universally accepted fundamental rights, freedoms and civil liberties, which shall be provided for and protected by entrenched and justiciable provisions in the Constitution, which shall be drafted after having given due consideration to inter alia, the fundamental rights contained in Chapter 3 of the Constitution.

III

The Constitution shall prohibit racial, gender and all other forms of discrimination and shall promote racial and gender equality and national unity.

IV

The Constitution shall be the supreme law of the land. It shall be binding on all organs of state at all levels of government.

V

The legal system shall ensure the equality of all before the law and an equitable legal process. Equality before the law includes laws, programmes or activities that have as their object the amelioration of the conditions of the disadvantaged, including those disadvantaged on the grounds of race, colour, or gender.

IV

There shall be a separation of powers between the legislature, executive and judiciary, with appropriate, checks and balances to ensure accountability, responsiveness and openness.
VII

The judiciary shall be appropriately qualified, independent and impartial and shall have the power and jurisdiction to safeguard and enforce the Constitution and all fundamental rights.

VIII

There shall be representative government embracing multi-party democracy, regular elections, universal adult suffrage, a common voters' roll, and, in general, proportional representation.

IX

Provision shall be made for freedom of information so that there can be open and accountable administration at all levels of government.

X

Formal legislative procedure shall be adhered to by legislative organs at all levels of government.

XI

The diversity of language and culture shall be acknowledged and protected, and conditions for their promotion shall be encouraged.

XII

Collective rights of self-determination in forming, joining and maintaining organs of civil society, including linguistic, cultural and religious associations, shall, on the basis of non-discrimination and free association, be recognised and protected.

XIII

The institution, status and role of traditional leadership, according to indigenous law, shall be recognised and protected in the Constitution. Indigenous law, like common law, shall be recognised and applied by the courts, subject to the fundamental rights contained in the Constitution and to legislation dealing specially therewith.

XIV

Provision shall be made for participation of minority political parties in the legislative process in a manner consistent with democracy.

XV

Amendments to the Constitution shall require special procedures involving special majorities.

XVI

Government shall be structured at national, provincial and local levels.
XVII

At each level of government there shall be democratic representation. This principle shall not derogate from the provisions of Principle XIII.

XVIII

The powers, boundaries and functions of the national, governments and provincial governments shall be defined in the Constitution. Amendments to the Constitution which alter the powers, boundaries, functions or institutions of provinces shall in addition to any other procedures specified in the Constitution for constitutional amendments, require the approval of a special majority of the legislatures of the provinces, alternatively, if there is such a chamber, a two-thirds majority of a chamber of Parliament composed of provincial representatives, and if the amendment concerns specific provinces only, the approval, of the legislatures of such provinces will also be needed. Provision shall be made for obtaining the views of a provincial legislature concerning all constitutional amendments regarding its powers, boundaries and functions.

XIX

The powers and functions at the national and provincial levels of government shall include exclusive and concurrent powers as well as the power to perform functions for other levels of government on an agency or delegation basis.

XX

Each level of government shall have appropriate and adequate legislative and executive powers and functions that will enable each level to function effectively. The allocation of powers between different levels of government shall be made on a basis which is conducive to financial viability at each level of government and to effective public administration, and which recognises the need for and promotes national unity and legitimate provincial autonomy and acknowledges cultural diversity.

XXI

The following criteria shall be applied in the allocation of powers to the national government and the provincial governments:

1. The level at which decisions can be taken most effectively in respect of the quality rendering of services, shall be the level responsible and accountable for the quality and the rendering of the services, and such level shall accordingly be empowered by the Constitution to do so.

2. Where it is necessary for the maintenance of essential national standards for the establishment of minimum standards required for the rendering of services, the maintenance of economic unity, the maintenance of national security or the prevention of unreasonable action taken by one province which is prejudicial to the interests of another province, or the country as a whole, the Constitution shall empower the national government to intervene through legislation or such other steps as may be defined in the Constitution.
3. Where there is necessity for South Africa to speak with one voice, or to act as a single entity—in particular in relation to other states—powers should be allocated to the national government.

4. Where uniformity across the nation is required for a particular function, the legislative power over that function should be allocated predominantly, if not wholly, to the national government.

5. The determination of national economic policies, and the power to promote interprovincial commerce and to protect the common market in respect of the mobility of goods, services, capital and labour should be allocated to the national government.

6. Provincial governments shall have powers, either exclusively or concurrently with the national government, inter alia—

(a) for the purposes of provincial planning and development and the rendering of services; and

(b) in respect of aspects of government dealing with specific socio-economic and cultural needs and the general well-being of the inhabitants of province.

7. Where mutual co-operation is essential or desirable or where it is required to guarantee equality of opportunity or access to a government service, the powers should be allocated concurrently to the national government and the provincial governments.

8. The Constitution shall specify how powers which are not specifically allocated in the Constitution to the national government or to a provincial government, shall be dealt with as necessary ancillary powers pertaining to the powers and functions allocated either to the national government or provincial governments.

XXII

The national government shall not exercise its powers (exclusive or concurrent) so as to encroach upon the geographical, functional or institutional integrity of the provinces.

XXIII

In the event of a dispute concerning the legislative powers allocated by the Constitution concurrently to the national government and provincial governments which cannot be resolved by a court on a construction of the Constitution, precedence shall be given to the legislative powers of the national government.

XXIV

A framework for local government powers, functions and structures shall be set out in the Constitution. The comprehensive powers, functions and other features of local government shall be set out in parliamentary statutes or in provincial legislation or in both.
XXV

The national government and provincial governments shall have fiscal powers and functions which will be defined in the Constitution. The framework for local government referred to in Principle XXIV shall make provision for appropriate fiscal powers and functions for different categories of local government.

XXVI

Each level of government shall have a constitutional right to as equitable share of revenue collected nationally so as to ensure that provinces and local governments are able to provide basic services and execute the functions allocated to them.

XXVII

A Financial and Fiscal Commission, in which each province shall be represented, shall recommend equitable fiscal and financial allocations to the provincial and local governments from revenue collected nationally, after taking into account the national interest, economic disparities between the provinces as well as the population and developmental needs, administrative responsibilities and other legitimate interests of each of the provinces.

XXVII

Notwithstanding the provisions of Principle XII, the right of employers and employees to join and form employer organisations and trade unions and to engage in collective bargaining shall be recognised and protected. Provision shall be made that every person shall have the right to last labour practices.

XXIX

The independence and impartiality of a Public Service Commission, a Reserve Bank, an Auditor-General and a Public Protector shall be provided for and safeguarded by the Constitution in the interests of the maintenance of effective public finance and administration and a high standard of professional ethics in the public service.

XXX

1. There shall be an efficient, non-partisan, career-oriented public service broadly representative of the South African community, functioning on a basis of fairness and which shall serve all members or the public in an unbiased and impartial manner, and shall, in the exercise of its powers and in compliance with its duties, loyally execute the law policies of the government of the day in the performance of its administrative functions. The structures and functioning of the public service, as well as the terms and conditions of service of its members shall be regulated by law.

2. Every member of the public service shall be entitled to a fair pension.
XXXI

Every member of the security forces (police, military and intelligence), and the security forces as a whole shall be required to perform their functions and exercise their power in the national interest and shall be prohibited from furthering or prejudicing party political interest.

XXXII

The Constitution shall provide that until 30 April 1999 the national executive shall be composed and shall function substantially in the manner provided for in Chapter 6 of this Constitution.

XXXIII

The Constitution shall provide that unless Parliament is dissolved on account of its passing a vote of no-confidence in the Cabinet, no national election shall be held before 30 April 1999.

A. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

1. This Paper looks at the question whether local government in the Northern Territory should be entrenched in a new Northern Territory constitution, and if so, the options for such entrenchment and the extent to which it should be entrenched, if at all.

2. The Paper raises a number of matters that could be considered for constitutional entrenchment in a new constitution for the Northern Territory. Although not an exhaustive list these matters could include the following:
   - the status of local government as the third sphere of government;
   - the protection of local government councils against arbitrary dismissal;
   - the guaranteeing of a central core of powers and functions to local government or at least a requirement of consultation before any change to those powers and functions;
   - the guarantee of direct franchise for local government elections; and
   - the protection of local government boundaries.

3. The paper highlights recent comparative developments in the other States of Australia that extend to recognition of local government under normal legislative parameters to constitutionally entrenched provisions and whether the Northern Territory could use those examples in framing local government provisions in a new Northern Territory constitution.

4. The Committee stresses that this is still an options paper and the views expressed herein do not necessarily represent the final views of the Committee. The paper is issued to invite further comment before the Committee makes its report to the Legislative Assembly.

B. INTRODUCTION

1. Terms of reference

On 28 August 1985, the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory of Australia by resolution established the Select Committee on Constitutional Development. Amendments to the Committee's original terms of reference were made when it was reconstituted on 28 April 1987. On 30 November 1989, the Legislative Assembly further resolved to amend the terms of reference by changing the Committee's status to a Sessional Committee. On 4 December 1990, and again on 27 June 1994, it was reconstituted with no further change to its terms of reference.

The original resolutions were passed in conjunction with proposals then being developed in the Northern Territory for a grant of statehood to the Northern Territory within the Australian federal system. The primary terms of reference include, as a major aspect of the work of the Committee, a consideration of matters connected with a new State constitution.
The primary terms of reference of the Sessional Committee are as follows:

"(1) a committee to be known as the Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development, be established to inquire into, report and make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on -

(a) a constitution for the new State and the principles upon which it should be drawn, including -

(i) legislative powers;
(ii) executive powers;
(iii) judicial powers; and
(iv) the method to be adopted to have a draft new State constitution approved by or on behalf of the people of the Northern Territory; and

(b) the issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the Federation as a new State; and

(c) such other constitutional and legal matters as may be referred to it by -

(i) relevant Ministers, or
(ii) resolution of the Assembly.

(2) the Committee undertake a role in promoting the awareness of constitutional issues to the Northern Territory and Australian populations."

2. Discussion and Information papers

The Committee has prepared and issued a number of papers arising from its terms of reference, as follows:

- Discussion Paper No 5, The Merits or Otherwise of Bringing an NT Constitution into Force Before Statehood.
- Discussion Paper No 8, A Northern Territory Bill of Rights?
- Information Paper No 1, Options for a Grant of Statehood.
- Interim Report No 1, A Northern Territory Constitutional Convention.
3. Purpose of this Paper

(a) This Paper looks at the question whether local government in the Northern Territory should be entrenched in a new State constitution, and if so, the options for such entrenchment and the extent to which it should be entrenched, if at all.

(b) In this paper, the term "local government", as applied to the Northern Territory, refers to both municipal and community government under the Local Government Act. The term "municipal government" encompasses cities, towns, and shires.

(c) The Committee stresses that this is still an options paper and the views expressed herein do not necessarily represent the final views of the Committee. The paper is issued to invite further comment before the Committee makes its report to the Legislative Assembly.

4. Background to this Paper and Previous Submissions

(a) The subject of this paper was considered briefly in the Committee's Discussion Paper on A Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory of October 1987, for ease of reference called the Discussion Paper. It will be observed that the Committee on that occasion was conscious of the fact that vast areas of the Northern Territory were not within any local government area. Other areas were covered by community government schemes, a particular form of local government in the Northern Territory. Any decision to extend local government was, it said, appropriately a matter for the new State in consultation with the local residents. Any constitutional recognition of local government must take into account the special situation of the Northern Territory and the associated difficulties of administration.

128 1987. Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Select Committee on Constitutional Development, Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory, Darwin.

"1. Arguments have been advanced in the Northern Territory proposing the constitutional entrenchment of the position of local government. At present, local government derives its existence, powers and status from the Local Government Act of the Territory and has no such entrenched position. The self-governing Northern Territory has both legislative power (through the Legislative Assembly) and executive authority (through Ministers of the Territory Government) in relation to all aspects of local government in the Territory.

2. Previous attempts to have local government recognised in the Commonwealth Constitution through the Constitutional Convention have so far brought no results, although the matter is presently under consideration by the Constitutional Commission. However four States have proceeded to recognise local government in their own constitutions - New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia and Western Australia.

3. Of these States, only the Victorian provision goes further than merely providing for formal recognition. The constitution of Victoria requires the existence of a general system of local government throughout the State (with some exceptions). Local government bodies are to be elected and are protected from dismissal except by Act of Parliament. Limitations are placed on suspension of local government bodies. The constitutional provisions have a limited degree of entrenchment (see discussion above) but subject thereto, ultimate control remains with the Victorian Parliament and Government.

4. The Northern Territory Local Government Association has previously indicated that any provision for constitutional recognition should be in accordance with the following principles:
(b) Subject to those considerations, the Committee favoured in that Discussion Paper some constitutional provisions for the recognition of local government in the new State, but it did not specify what form they should or could take. It invited public comment on the nature of those provisions.

(c) As a result of that invitation, a number of submissions were received by the Committee, including from municipal and community government bodies and associations in the Northern Territory, some Northern Territory organisations and a number of individuals. Of these, all favoured at least some minimal recognition of local government in a new State constitution. A few thought that the new constitution should say no more than this, the detail being left to ordinary legislation. Several sought more detailed protections.

(d) The Northern Territory Local Government Association, with the broad support of the Northern Territory Community Government Association (but extending to community government), together with similar comments by several other commentators, maintained its position for a more detailed form of constitutional recognition as indicated in the Discussion Paper.

One commentator thought that a local government body should not be able to be dismissed until after an enquiry and then a referendum with at least a two-thirds majority. The Tangentyere Council Inc. maintained its view that constitutional recognition should extend to Aboriginal local government bodies, which should be able to coexist with and within the boundaries of other local government bodies, and that the structure of the Aboriginal local government provisions should accord with Aboriginal tradition.

(e) A list of those who made submissions on this aspect of the Discussion Paper is in Appendix 1.

(a) general competence and autonomy for each local government body to act for the peace, order and good government of its area;
(b) secure financial basis;
(c) proper recognition of the elected member role;
(d) protection from dismissal of individual local government bodies without public inquiry; and
(e) due consultation prior to any changes to powers, functions, duties, responsibilities and financial resources.

These principles have been adopted from the policy of the Local Government Association and Shires Association Executives, endorsed by the Australian Council of Local Government Associations. They were considered in the 1984 Local Government Report of the Structure of Government Sub-Committee to the Australian Constitutional Convention.

5. The Select Committee notes the special situation of the Northern Territory, where vast areas are not within any local government area. Other areas are covered by community government schemes. Any decision to extend local government or community government is appropriately a matter for the new State in consultation with the local residents. Constitutional recognition of local government must take into account the special situation of the Territory and the associated difficulties of administration.

6. Subject to these considerations, the Select Committee favours some constitutional provisions for the recognition of local government in the new State. It invites public comment on the nature of those provisions.
In the Committee's Discussion Paper No.6, under the heading of Self-Determination, the Committee had to consider the existing position as to local government in so far as it was relevant to Aboriginal Territorians. It noted that while a number of Aboriginal communities had opted for community government, many others had chosen other mechanisms for the legal organisation of their community under both Northern Territory law and Commonwealth law.

"(f) At a wider Territory level, various arrangements exist for encouraging Aboriginal participation in the community as a whole and for ameliorating their existing disadvantages. This includes a variety of programs and services designed for Aboriginal people and aimed at addressing any inequality. Many of the latter are federally sponsored but others are Territory Government initiatives.

(g) It is theoretically open to particular Aboriginal communities in the Territory to seek greater local control through the formation of a local government municipality under the Local Government Act. So far, this has not occurred. It is doubtful that this existing form of local government in the Territory is an appropriate structure to implement Aboriginal self-determination.

(h) The Local Government Act was amended in 1978 to introduce the concept of community government (see Part VIII of that Act). This form of government is not directed specifically at Aboriginal communities, although it has most commonly been utilised by those communities. It requires a minimum of 10 residents of an area outside an ordinary local government municipality to apply to the relevant Territory Minister for the establishment of a community government. A draft scheme is then prepared and advertised, and the Minister is obliged to consult with the residents of the area. The Minister may then approve the draft, with or without amendments.

(i) The community government scheme operates as a simplified form of local government under an elected council. The functions of a community government are expressed in the scheme and can cover a wide range of matters (see section 270). A community government can also make by-laws on a wide range of matters and can by those by-laws provide for the imposition of fines for breach (see section 292). By-laws are subject to tabling and disallowance action in the Legislative Assembly (Interpretation Act, section 63).

(j) A list of those communities in the Territory that have adopted this form of government, and the functions covered by each community government scheme, are set out in Appendix 4 to this Paper.

(k) There has been some debate and difference of views about the extent to which community government has been successful in achieving a degree of autonomy in Aboriginal communities under that scheme.

(l) In the Committee's first Discussion Paper on a "Proposed new State Constitution for the Northern Territory" (October 1987), the Committee noted the special situation of the Northern Territory, with vast areas not within any local government area. Some areas were covered by community government schemes but most areas were not subject to either. The Committee raised the question of the constitutional entrenchment of local government, but did not consider it in detail.

(m) A number of Aboriginal communities have chosen to use other mechanisms for the legal organisation of their community. In some cases they have used the mechanism of an incorporated association or trading association under Territory law (see the Associations Incorporation Act). In other cases, they have sought incorporation as an Aboriginal Council or Association under Commonwealth law (Aboriginal Councils and Associations Act 1976). A list of the various communities in the Territory established under Commonwealth legislation, and the manner in which...
Only a few of the commentators on Discussion Paper No 6 specifically referred to local and community government. One felt that Aboriginal people could best be served by keeping relevant municipal powers with the Federal Government. However this will be the case in any event, in that existing Commonwealth legislation will presumably continue to operate, whatever may be included in the new Northern Territory Constitution. The Tangentyere Council Inc. advocated that Aboriginal traditions as applied to local government should override democratic requirements as to local government.

The Committee in Discussion Paper No. 6 looked at the community government option as one possible form of securing a measure of autonomy to Aboriginal communities. It felt that a more secure constitutional position for community government would not of itself necessarily guarantee a much greater degree of local autonomy for those communities, but that it did provide one framework upon which such greater autonomy could be constructed by other means. It invited submissions — see Appendix 2.

C. EXISTING POSITION IN AUSTRALIA

I. Australia generally

(a) The constitutional status of local government in Australia has traditionally been determined by the States. This was a carry over from pre-federation days, when this was a matter within the province of the former Australian colonies and their governments. The Commonwealth has no constitutional power with respect to local government except by indirect means; eg, by the use of financial grants to the States for the purpose of local government. An attempt to alter the Australian Constitution by national referendum in 1988 to recognise local government as the third sphere of government in this country failed.

(b) However local government as the third sphere of government is now recognised in all of the Constitutions of the States (see below), although the extent of such recognition and the protection thereby offered, varies from State to State.

2. Northern Territory

(a) At present in the Northern Territory, there is no constitutional recognition of local government. The legal capacity to establish local government in the Northern Territory and the powers, responsibilities and other legal incidents of that local government are dependant upon an ordinary Act of the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly, the Local Government Act. That Act provides for the establishment of two forms of local government municipal and community government.

those communities are established, is set out in Appendix 5 to this paper. A comparable list of those Aboriginal bodies incorporated under Northern Territory law is not available, but it is understood the number is significant.

(n) Some of these communities are located on Aboriginal land or community living areas, while others are not. In the case of some Aboriginal organisations (other than community government), their area of operation can overlap with that of an ordinary local government municipality (for example, the Tangentyere Council Inc. of Alice Springs).
(b) The subject of local government gets no mention in the Northern Territory (Self Government) Act 1978, the main Commonwealth Act giving rise to Self-Government. The subject of "local government" is mentioned in Regulation 4(1) of the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Regulations, but this only has effect to ensure that Ministers of the Northern Territory, being the Ministers that form the Northern Territory Government and are chosen from among the members of the Legislative Assembly, have executive authority with respect to the subject of local government. There is no right to a grant of local government except in so far as ordinary Northern Territory legislation confers it. Nor is there any guarantee that local government, once granted, will be continued except in so far as ordinary Northern Territory legislation or the common law so provides. There is similarly no constitutional guarantee that the powers of any existing local government body in the Northern Territory will continue into the future.

(c) The absence of any constitutional protections means that local government does not have as secure a legal position in the Northern Territory as does the Commonwealth Government as the first sphere of government and to a lesser extent the Northern Territory Government as the second sphere.

(d) It is to be noted, however, that the grant of Northern Territory Self-Government itself, by which the Northern Territory Government is established and operates separately from the Commonwealth, does not have any greater legal protection beyond that of an ordinary Commonwealth Act. This is different from the States, the continued existence of which are guaranteed by the Australian Constitution.

(e) Local government, as the third sphere of government in the Northern Territory, has had a history almost as long as European settlement. It began with the proclamation in 1874 of the District of Palmerston under a South Australian District Councils Act then operating in the Northern Territory (the Northern Territory then being part of South Australia).

(f) Following the surrender of the Northern Territory by South Australia and its acceptance by the Commonwealth as a Territory of the Commonwealth in 1911, new Territory legislation, the Darwin Town Council Ordinance, was enacted in 1915, providing for the continuance of local government in Darwin. The Darwin Council continued as the only local governing body in the Territory until it was abolished in 1937. It was not re-established as a municipality until 1957.

(g) Since that time, a number of other local government bodies have been established in the Northern Territory under Northern Territory legislation. There are currently 6 municipalities in the Northern Territory. There are also 2 special purpose mining towns with a particular form of municipal arrangements.

(h) In addition, under amendments to the Local Government Act in 1979, a new form of local government was introduced, being described as "community government". It was designed to meet the needs of smaller Northern Territory communities, both Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal. The provisions introduced a measure of flexibility in the design of community government schemes to meet the particular needs of the community in question. Such schemes, once approved, have effect as subordinate Northern Territory law, subject to disallowance by the Legislative Assembly. The first community government scheme became operational in 1980. Since that time, a number of communities have also adopted this model. There are currently 29 community governments in the Northern Territory, with another 18 currently under consideration.

(i) Most of the Northern Territory remains outside of any local government arrangements because of the sparse population.

(j) As pointed out in the Committee's Discussion Paper No 6, and as already mentioned above, a number of Aboriginal communities in the Northern Territory have chosen not to use local government under Northern Territory law as the mechanism for the legal organisation of their community. In some cases they have used an incorporated association or trading association under Northern Territory law or have sought incorporation under Commonwealth law. For present purpose, this is of limited relevance, as this Paper is only concerned with the possible constitutional entrenchment of local government and not with constitutional recognition of other forms of community organisation. However it should be noted that there are currently 30 incorporated associations in the Northern Territory established under either Commonwealth law (4 Associations) or Northern Territory law (26 Associations) which are treated as local government bodies for the purposes of local government funding arrangements.

(k) In some quarters it has been suggested that there could be some legal doubt as to whether local government under a Territory law is capable of operating on Aboriginal land under the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act 1976. The Committee notes that the Northern Territory Government has taken the view that local government is capable of operating on Aboriginal land and has acted accordingly. The Committee is of the view that this is one area where there should be no doubt. This may be able to be resolved in any arrangements for the patriation of the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act 1976 to the new State as a new State law.

3. New South Wales

(a) Part 8 of the NSW Constitution recognises the system of local government in that State, but the detail is left to State legislation. Thus while local government generally has constitutional status as the third sphere of government, the existence, continuance and powers of particular Councils are dependant on State legislation.

(b) A copy of Part 8 is at Appendix 3.

4. Victoria

(a) The Victorian Constitution Act 1975 was amended by the Constitution (Local Government) Act 1988 to insert a new Part IIA to give constitutional status to Local Government. It gives a somewhat greater measure of protection than NSW to an existing local government Council, providing that it cannot be dismissed except by an Act of Parliament relating to that Council.

132 see the Associations Incorporation Act.
133 see the Aboriginal Councils and Associations Act 1976.
(b) Part IIA can only be changed by an Act of Parliament by an absolute majority of members in both houses of that Parliament.

(c) A copy of Part IIA is at Appendix 4.

5. Queensland

(a) The Constitution Act of Queensland was amended by the Constitution Act Amendment Act 1989, to insert sections 54—56. These give a measure of constitutional protection to existing Councils, requiring any dissolution of a Council to be confirmed by motion in the State Parliament. It also requires notice of any bill in the Parliament which will affect local government to be given to the Local Government Association.

(b) These new provisions are entrenched, in the sense that a bill for the abolition of local government in the State must be passed at a State referendum.

(c) A copy of these sections is at Appendix 5.

6. South Australia

(a) The Constitution Act of South Australia was amended by the Constitution Act Amendment Act, 1980, to insert a new Part IIA in the Constitution on Local Government. It is in similar terms to that of NSW. It is also entrenched in the sense that an amendment to Part IIA requires an absolute majority of all members of both houses of Parliament.

(b) A copy of Part IIA is at Appendix 6.

7. Western Australia

(a) The Constitution Act of WA was amended in 1979 to insert a new Part IIIB in the Constitution in terms somewhat similar to that of NSW.

(b) A copy of Part IIIB is at Appendix 7.

8. Tasmania

(a) The Constitution Act of Tasmania was amended by the Constitution Amendment (Recognition of Local Government) Act 1988 to insert a new Part IVA in the Constitution on Local Government. It entrenches the division of the State into municipal areas such that this division cannot be altered unless the Local Government Advisory Board under the Local Government Act so recommends.

(b) A copy of Part IVA is at Appendix 8.

D. OPTIONS

1. General

(a) Local government has had a long and proud history in Australia. In earlier times, it exercised a wide range of local functions and powers at a time when central government was not so all encompassing as it is today. Many of its essential functions were gradually taken over by the States in the interests of uniformity and efficiency. But local government survived in Australia and remains strong in most places. It continues to exhibit four main characteristics of democratic government, namely:

* it is multi-functionary;
* it exercises autonomy in its legal decision making;
* it imposes and collects its own taxes or rates;
* it is comprised of elected representatives.

(b) However because of local government's subordinate constitutional position, there was and still largely is potential for having its position as the third sphere of government eroded, reducing its powers and limiting its discretions.

(c) There are clear arguments for retaining local government in Australia as an independent sphere of government. It is that level of government that is closest to the citizen and hence is usually more accessible to the citizen. There are strong arguments that purely local issues requiring a decision are best resolved at the local level. Its existence accommodates the view that says that it is desirable to have the greatest possible degree of decentralisation in the business of government.

(d) If anything, local government has increased in importance since federation in Australia. This has been assisted by the allocation by the Commonwealth through the States and the Northern Territory to local government of a portion of Commonwealth financial grants. Much of the Australian landmass is subject to local government, although this applies to only a small proportion of the area of the Northern Territory.

(e) Constitutional entrenchment offers one way of securing a measure of protection to local government. However the value of such a method of protection depends upon the nature and scope of the constitutional provisions and the degree to which they are entrenched in a constitution.

(f) Matters that could be considered for constitutional entrenchment in a new constitution for the Northern Territory include the status of local government as the third sphere of government, the protection of local government councils against arbitrary dismissal, the guaranteeing of a central core of powers and functions to local government or at least a requirement of consultation before any change to those powers and functions, the guarantee of direct franchise for local government elections and the protection of local government boundaries.

(g) As to the issue of the degree of entrenchment, the Committee has already expressed the view that the new constitution for the Northern Territory should be entrenched, in that it should only be able to be changed by a successful referendum of Northern Territory voters. It follows that if a decision is taken that local government is to be given constitutional status in a new Northern Territory constitution, it will acquire a real measure of protection which will be difficult to alter later.

(h) On one view, this might be considered to have disadvantages. The rigid nature of any such constitutional entrenchment would prevent later changes by Parliament by ordinary legislation where thought necessary or desirable. On one view, such flexibility is desirable to ensure an adequate level of supervision by the State concerned. The opposite view is that such rigid provisions are necessary to protect the constitutional status and autonomy of local government and to prevent changes by ordinary State legislation which may be perceived as being detrimental to local government.

(i) It is noticed that any such perceived disadvantages have not dissuaded the States from taking action to constitutionalise local government in their own State constitutions, although the extent of the protections thereby conferred varies from State to State, as discussed above.

(j) There may in fact be good arguments from a State perspective for entrenching local government in a State constitution. By doing so, local government is confirmed as being within the overall State structure, even if with a degree of autonomy. This should indicate to the Commonwealth that it is not a matter for which the Commonwealth has any direct constitutional responsibility. Given the protection of State constitutions contained in section 106 of the Australian Constitution, this tends to confirm local government as a State responsibility. The fact that local government is protected by all State constitutions also provides a reason as to why there may be no need for a change to the Australian Constitution on this subject.

2. Particular Northern Territory Considerations

(a) As indicated in the Committee's Discussion Paper,\textsuperscript{134} the fact that local government has not yet been extended to most of the area of the Northern Territory, and the sparse population of much of the Northern Territory, are factors that must be taken into account in any proposal to constitutionalise local government in a new Northern Territory constitution. It might be thought as a result that there should be no right to a grant of local government. Rather, a decision should be taken by the Northern Territory Government in each case where a new grant of local government is sought as to whether that grant is justified in the particular circumstances of that case. This is the current position under the \textit{Local Government Act}.

(b) On the other hand, once local government is established in a locality in the Northern Territory, there is then a question whether it should receive a measure of constitutional protection in any new Northern Territory constitution.

(c) There may be a view that the desirability of such constitutional protection may not be as great in the Northern Territory as elsewhere in Australia. This may in part be indicated by the relatively small population of the Northern Territory, and as a consequence, the small number of electors for each seat of the Northern Territory legislature (presently the Legislative Assembly). This means that, by and large, the members of that legislature are more accessible to the electors they represent and arguably those members are more able to remain in touch with local issues. Whether as a result this diminishes the importance of, or the need for, local government as an autonomous third sphere of government in the Northern Territory, is a matter for consideration.

(d) If local government is seen as one avenue for granting a greater measure of autonomy for Aboriginal communities and as a suitable vehicle (but not necessarily the sole vehicle) for implementing a form of self-determination within the overall framework of the Northern Territory, then the arguments for constitutional entrenchment of local government may acquire more force. Depending on the extent of entrenchment, this should ensure that the Aboriginal autonomy thereby conferred cannot be altered by an ordinary Act of the Northern Territory Parliament.

(e) The Committee wishes to assess the strength of feeling in support of local government in the Northern Territory as part of assessing whether there is a need for any such constitutional protections.

3. Constitutional Options

(a) The simplest form of any constitutional entrenchment would be to merely recognise local government in the Northern Territory in its new constitution as the third sphere of government, but to leave the detail to ordinary Northern Territory legislation. This is the position in the States of NSW and WA. This would in effect create a non justiciable form of recognition, in that there would be no right to a grant of local government in a particular case, and once granted, there would be no constitutional guarantee of its continuance or powers.

(b) This position could be supplemented by a constitutional provision that there must continue to be a system of local government in the Northern Territory, and that there can be no change to this position without a constitutional amendment. This is basically the position in South Australia, in that case requiring an absolute majority of both houses of State Parliament for there to cease to be a system of local government in that State. A similar provision in Queensland requires a State referendum to abolish the system of local government in that State.

(c) A further provision in the Queensland Constitution could also be considered; that is, that any Bill in the State Parliament which affects local government is to be referred to the Local Government Association first for consultation before passage.

(d) None of these provisions would, if incorporated in a new Northern Territory constitution, offer specific guarantees to a particular local government body in the Northern Territory.

(e) The Committee has already indicated the difficulties in the Northern Territory with any conferral of a right to a grant of local government where none presently exists. The Committee notes that no State constitution confers such a right.

(f) However once such a grant has been made, there are a range of possibilities for entrenching guarantees in respect of the particular body. These include

(i) A statement of general competence for any local government body to act for the peace, order and good government of its area in relation to the powers, functions, duties and responsibilities conferred upon it, providing presumably that it does not act inconsistently with any Northern Territory law. Any change in this respect by a later Northern Territory law could be required to be subject to prior consultation with local government in some way.

There is a related question whether there is a need to give the existing local government provisions some additional constitutional status, such that they cannot be unilaterally altered later by an ordinary Act of Parliament to change the powers, functions, duties or responsibilities of local government. This is discussed below in relation to organic laws.

(ii) A statement that the Northern Territory law on local government shall provide for members of local government to be directly elected. This in turn raises the question whether this should be mandatory for Aboriginal community organisations that desire a method of selection of their representatives more in line with their customs.

(iii) A provision limiting the power of the State to dismiss the members of an existing local government body and to appoint an administrator. Such a provision is contained in the Victorian Constitution, requiring an Act of Parliament for any dismissal. In Queensland, the State Constitution requires a motion in State Parliament to confirm the dissolution of a council. It would be possible to go further and require a public inquiry before any dismissal, as advocated by the Northern Territory Local Government Association, and possibly also a local referendum, presumably with a power of suspension in urgent cases of misconduct in the interim.

(iv) A provision protecting the boundaries of a local government body from change. In the Tasmanian Constitution, this requires a prior recommendation of the Local Government Advisory Board.

(g) A further option for consideration is whether the whole or part of the existing Local Government Act should become an organic law under the new Northern Territory constitution, such that it could not thereafter be changed by an ordinary Act of Parliament. Instead it would require a special majority of the Parliament for any change to that Act, in accordance with the general provisions for organic laws. This would have the value of entrenching the status of local government generally in the Northern Territory, possibly as an alternative to incorporation of local government in the new Northern Territory constitution. It would not of itself, however, provide guarantees to particular local government bodies beyond the provisions of the Act.

(h) A further option again, calculated to protect particular local government bodies and to ensure their autonomy, would be to give that particular grant of local government some constitutional status as part of any wider grant of self-determination under an agreement entered into between the Northern Territory Government and the relevant Aboriginal body.\footnote{1993. Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development. Discussion Paper No. 6 - Aboriginal Rights and Issues Options for Entrenchment, Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory, Darwin: 33.} This could be seen as of particular value to Aboriginal communities contemplating this form of local organisation as part of any wider local or regional agreement.

(i) There may be other options for constitutional recognition. The Committee would welcome comments and suggestions.

(j) The alternative is no constitutional recognition at all, leaving local government to be dealt with by ordinary Northern Territory legislation.

(k) The Committee stresses that it has not yet decided to favour any of these options, and invites comments and submissions.

COMMUNITY GOVERNMENT - OPTIONS

"5. Community Government - Options

(a) The Committee, in its first Discussion Paper on a "Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory" (October 1987) made the point that because of the special situation of the Northern Territory, there should be no obligation to have a form of local government (including community government) for all parts of the Territory. Any decision to extend local government was appropriately a matter for the new State in consultation with the local residents.

(b) On the other hand, arguably there should be a right to apply for a grant of local government (including community government) and to have the application fairly considered. Such a right could be constitutionally entrenched.

(c) Once local government (including community government) is established in any area, the question arises of whether that form of government should be constitutionally entrenched in some way, such that it cannot be arbitrarily abolished or its powers reduced. The Committee in its first Discussion Paper raised the question of constitutional entrenchment, but pointed out that this must take into account the special situation of the Territory and the associated difficulties of administration. Subject to these considerations, the Committee said it favoured some constitutional provisions for the recognition of local government in the new State.

(d) An alternative to entrenchment of the position of local government (including community government) in a new constitution, or perhaps as a supplement to it, would be to provide for an Organic Law - as described in Item D.2.1, (f) above - on local and community government, to be made by the new State Parliament after negotiations with Aboriginal and other communities directly involved. Such a law could be made subject to special amendment requirements.

(e) There may also be grounds for reviewing the present provisions of the Local Government Act as to community government, to minimise Territory or new State governmental controls and oversight and to maximise the powers of community government within its agreed charter and functions. This has been discussed above. Whether such amendments would make community government a more acceptable option for Aboriginal self-determination is a matter for consideration.

(f) Public comments have already been received by the Committee on the matter of community government and its constitutional entrenchment. Mr Kevin Anderson of the former Northern Territory Community Government Association stated:

"I would say that the introduction of local government into remote communities in the Northern Territory has been one of the greatest initiatives taken by the government of the day in the Northern Territory, supported by the opposition. We believe that it has given people in remote communities an unprecedented opportunity to manage their own affairs and, obviously, our concern with any constitution of a future Northern Territory state is that it should protect the powers which have been devolved through legislation which incorporates remote communities as legitimate partners in the third tier of government. For that reason, our submission states that we would like to see any future constitution enshrine protection clauses of local government generally in the Territory. We do not wish to see any discrimination in terms of the way the community government is treated, as opposed to municipal government. We see them both as legitimate types of local government and do not subscribe to any distinction which sees municipal government as a superior form of 'traditional' local government. We believe that all local governing bodies in the Territory, whether in remote locations or in major municipalities, are equal under the law. We would like to see that guaranteed in the constitution.

Our submission argues for constitutional recognition in accordance with 5 principles, these being:

. general competence and autonomy for each local government body to act for peace, order and good government in its area;
. a secure financial basis;
. a proper recognition of the elected member's role;
. protection from dismissal of individual local government bodies without public inquiry; and
. due consultation prior to any changes to powers, functions, duties, responsibilities and financial resources.''

(g) On the other hand, Tangentyere Council Inc. expressed the view that it was not happy with the community government option, as the powers retained by the Territory Government were considered to be unacceptable. In its submission to the Committee, the Council raised concerns about the physical overlap of Aboriginal forms of local government with ordinary forms of municipal local government. It concluded:

- Therefore it is submitted that if the Committee wishes to proceed with formulating a constitutional recognition of local government it should include specific reference to the situation of Aboriginal Town Campers by:

- ensuring that an Aboriginal local governing body can exist within another local governing body's boundary;

- to overcome any doubt about the limitations of the Racial Discrimination Act, specifically allow the Aboriginal local governing bodies to limit membership to Aborigines;

- specifically allow aspects of the constitutions of Aboriginal local governing bodies which are drafted according to Aboriginal tradition to override requirements on other local governing bodies for democratic elections where there is a conflict.
(h) It would not be possible, by a Territory or new State constitution or by a Territory or new State law, to exclude the operation of the Aboriginal Councils and Associations Act 1976 of the Commonwealth in the Territory. Even if community government was to be given a more secure constitutional position in the Territory, some Aboriginal communities may still prefer to establish or continue their legal organisation under that Act.

(i) A more secure constitutional position for community government will not of itself necessarily guarantee a much greater degree of local autonomy for Aboriginal communities. However it does provide one framework upon which such greater autonomy can be constructed by other means.

(j) The Committee would welcome comments on the nature and extent of any constitutional guarantees of local government (including community government) and how these may be best designed to facilitate a real measure of autonomy for Aboriginal communities.

(k) Where community government is established over an area of Aboriginal land, issues arise as to how the powers and functions of that community government can be reconciled with the powers and functions of the traditional Aboriginal owners and custodians of that land. The Committee would also welcome comment on this issue.

(l) The Committee also welcome comment on whether there are any alternatives to community government for Aboriginal communities (other than under the Aboriginal Councils and Associations Act). Options include a possible expanded role for the traditional Aboriginal owners and custodians of Aboriginal land, as well as possible new forms of government on a local or regional basis. The latter was recently advocated in the Final Report of the Legislation Review Committee of Queensland relating to the "Management of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Communities" (November 1991)."

PART 8 - LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Local Government

51. (1) There shall continue to be a system of local government for the State under which duly elected or duly appointed local government bodies are constituted with responsibilities for acting for the better government of those parts of the State that are from time to time subject to that system of local government.

(2) The manner in which local government bodies are constituted and the nature and extent of their powers, authorities, duties and functions shall be as determined by or in accordance with laws of the Legislature.

(3) The reference in subsection (2) to laws of the Legislature shall be read as a reference to laws that have been enacted by the Legislature, whether before or after the commencement of this section, and that are for the time being in force.

(4) For the purposes of this section, the Western Lands Commissioner, the Lord Howe Island Board, and an administrator with all or any of the functions of a local government body, shall be deemed to be local government bodies.

3. For Part IIA of the Constitution Act 1975 substitute:

"PART IIA—LOCAL GOVERNMENT"

Local government.

"74A. (1) There is to continue to be a system of local government for Victoria consisting of democratically elected Councils having the functions and powers that the Parliament considers are necessary to ensure the peace, order and good government of each municipal district.

   (2) An elected Council does not have to be constituted in respect of any area in Victoria—
   (a) which is not significantly and permanently populated; or
   (b) in which the functions of local government are carried out by or under arrangements made by a public statutory body which is carrying on large-scale operations in the area."

Local government laws.

"74B. (1) Parliament may make any laws it considers necessary for or with respect to—
   (a) the constitution of Councils; and
   (b) the objectives, functions, powers, duties and responsibilities of Councils; and
(c) entitlement to vote and enrolment for elections of Councils; and
(d) the conduct of and voting at elections of Councils; and
(e) the counting of votes at elections of Councils; and
(f) the qualifications to be a Councillor; and
(g) the disqualification of a person from being or continuing to be a Councillor; and
(h) the powers, duties and responsibilities of Councillors and Council staff; and
(i) any other act, matter or thing relating to local administration.

(2) A Council cannot be dismissed except by an Act of Parliament relating to the Council.

(3) Parliament may make laws for or with respect to—

(a) the suspension of a Council; and
(b) the administration of a Council during a period in which the Council is suspended or dismissed; and
(c) the re-instatement of a Council which has been suspended; and
(d) the election of a Council if a suspended Council is-reinstated; and
(e) the election of a Council where a Council has been dismissed."

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

54. System of local government. (1) There must be and continue to be a system of local government in Queensland under which duly elected local government bodies are constituted each being charged with the good rule and government of that part of Queensland from time to time subject to that system of local government and committed to the jurisdiction of that local government body.

(2) The manner in which local government bodies are constituted and the nature and extent of their powers, authorities, duties and functions are as determined by and in accordance with the laws of the Parliament of Queensland.

(3) Nothing in this section affects the operation of laws of the Parliament of Queensland with respect to the carrying out of the powers, authorities, duties and functions of a local government body by a person or persons appointed where—

(a) the council of the local government body has been dissolved;

or

(b) the council of a local government body is unable to be duly elected, until such time as the council of a local government body has been duly elected.

(4) The reference in subsections (2) and (3) to the laws of the Parliament of Queensland is a reference to the laws enacted by that Parliament, before or after the passing of the Constitution Act Amendment Act 1989, and for the time being in force.

(5) For the purposes of this section a Joint Local Authority Board and any person or persons appointed to carry out the powers, authorities, duties and functions of a council of a local government body as an Administrator are deemed to be the council of a local government body.

55. Manner of appointing persons to exercise powers authorities, duties and functions of local government. (1) A body constituted or deemed to be constituted by one or more persons appointed (but not duly elected) after the commencement of the Constitution Act Amendment Act 1989 to carry out the powers, authorities, duties and functions of a council of a local government body is not a council of a local government body appointed in accordance with section 54 (3)(a) and, notwithstanding the provisions of any Act, such person or persons is or are not authorized to carry out powers, authorities, duties and functions of a council of a local government body unless the power conferred by law to dissolve the council of a local government body constituted or deemed to be constituted by such person or persons has been exercised in accordance with this section.

(2) The instrument that purports to dissolve the council of a local government body or a copy of the instrument must be tabled in the Legislative Assembly within 14 sitting days after the instrument has been made and, to the extent that it so purports, the instrument takes effect merely a suspension from office of the duly elected members of the council of the local government body concerned until the Legislative Assembly, or the motion of the member of the Assembly for the time being responsible for local government in the State, within a period of 14 sitting days from such tabling confirms the dissolution of the council of the local government body.

(3) Where the Legislative Assembly confirms the dissolution of the council of a local government body, the instrument takes effect according to its terms as a dissolution of the council of the local government body concerned.

(4) Where the Legislative Assembly—

(a) refuses to affirm the motion referred to in subsection (2); or
(b) fails, within the period of 14 sitting days, to affirm the motion referred to in subsection (2), the instrument to dissolve the council of the local government body thereupon ceases to have effect and—

(c) the suspension from office of the duly elected members of the council of the local government body thereupon ceases and they are reinstated in their respective offices; and
(d) the appointment of the person or persons appointed to exercise the powers, authorities, duties and functions of the council of the local government body thereupon terminates.

(5) Any person or persons appointed (but not duly elected) according to law to carry out the powers, authorities, duties and functions of a council of a local government body whose members are, pursuant to this section, suspended from office is or are authorized to carry out those powers authorities, duties and functions during the period of suspension.

(6) In this section, the expression "local government body" means a body constituted by duly elected members and changed with carrying on the functions of local government.

56. Procedure on Bills affecting local government. (1) A member of the Legislative Assembly who is to be in charge of the passage in the Assembly of a Bill that is the responsibility of the member of the Assembly for the time being responsible for local government in the State and that, if enacted by the Parliament, would affect local government bodies generally, or any of them, if he considers compliance with this subsection is practicable in the particular case must cause a summary of the Bill to be given to an association that represents local government bodies in the State a reasonable time before he (or a member on his behalf) moves for leave of the Assembly to bring in the Bill.

(2) A Bill for an Act whereby the whole of the State would cease to have a system of local government that conforms to that prescribed by section 54 (1) must not be presented to Her Majesty or the Governor for assent unless, on a day, appointed by Order in Council, no earlier than six months and no later than one month before the Bill is introduced in the Assembly a proposal that the State should cease to have such a system of local government has been approved by majority vote of the electors of the State voting on the proposal.
A Bill assented to consequent upon its presentation in contravention of this subsection is of no effect as an Act.

When such proposal is submitted to the electors of the State the vote must be taken in such manner as the Parliament prescribes.

Any of the electors of the State is entitled to bring proceedings in the Supreme Court for a declaration, injunction or other remedy to enforce the provisions of this subsection either before or after a Bill of a kind received to in this subsection is presented for assent.

In this subsection "electors of the State" means the persons qualified to vote at a general election of members of the Assembly according to the provisions of the Elections Act 1983-1985 or of any Act in substitution therefor.".

53. Section 52 does not affect the operation of any law —

(a) prescribing circumstances in which the offices of members of a local governing body shall become and remain vacant; or

(b) providing for the administration of any area of the State —

(i) to which the system maintained under that section does not for the time being extend; or

(ii) when the offices of all the members of the local governing body for that area are vacant; or

(c) limiting or otherwise affecting the operation of a law relating to local government; or

(d) conferring any power relating to local government on a person other than a duly constituted local governing body.

A. INTRODUCTION

1. Terms of Reference

On 28 August, 1985, the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory of Australia by resolution established the Select Committee on Constitutional Development. Amendments to the Committee's terms of reference were made when the Committee was reconstituted on April 28, 1987 following the March 1987 election. The main portion of the Committee’s current terms of reference is set out in F below. The resolutions were passed in conjunction with proposals then being developed in the Northern Territory for a grant of Statehood to the Territory within the Australian federal system. The terms of reference include provision for the Select Committee to inquire into and to report and make recommendations on the issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the federation as a new State, this being in addition to its main task in relation to a new State constitution.

2. Discussion and Information Papers

(a) The Select Committee has decided to issue a number of discussion papers for public comment on matters arising from the terms of reference. The discussion papers will deal with the legislature, executive, judiciary of the new State and other matters. The purpose of these papers is to invite public comment with a view to assisting the committee to make recommendations on a new State constitution.

(b) The Select Committee is also desirous of issuing information papers to the public on issues relevant to a grant of Statehood to the Northern Territory by way of background to assist members of the public in formulating their views on the various matters of importance. This information paper is one such paper.

(c) This information paper looks at the methods available for making a grant of Statehood and indicates which is the preferred method. Clearly the method of grant is of considerable importance and will inevitably affect the preparation of the new State constitution. Public comment is invited on this paper.

B. OPTIONS FOR GRANT OF STATEHOOD

1. A new State can be created in 2 ways -

(a) By Act of the Commonwealth Parliament under section 121 of the Commonwealth Constitution, under which Statehood may be granted on terms and conditions, including the extent of representation in either House of the Parliament, as it thinks fit.

OR

(b) By national referendum to alter the Commonwealth Constitution under section 123 by way of a grant of Statehood.

2. Copies of both sections 121 and 123 are set out in D below.
3. A national referendum of Australian electors is not mandatory for the section 121 method, but is for the section 12e method. The record of success with national referendums in the past has not been very good. For either method, legislation must be passed by the Commonwealth Parliament.

4. Either method gives rise to some constitutional uncertainties in relation to the representation of the new State in the Commonwealth Parliament in particular, the uncertainties arise from section 24 and the second last paragraph of section 128 of the constitution.

5. In addition, the section 121 method gives rise to doubts as to the scope of the Commonwealth's power to impose terms and conditions on a new State that might place that new State in an inferior constitutional position compared with existing States.

6. It is beyond the scope of this paper to enter upon a detailed consideration of these doubts and uncertainties.

7. There is no mechanism for seeking an advisory opinion of the High Court to clarify the constitutional doubts and uncertainties surrounding either method. However a High Court decision could be sought upon the passage of the relevant Statehood legislation by the Commonwealth Parliament but before its commencement.

8. Advice has been sought from Professor Howard on the question of the most appropriate method for the grant of Statehood. He has advised that the only practical option is to pursue the section 121 method and hope for co-operation in seeking to resolve the serious doubts about its meaning by bringing an action for a declaration in the High Court before any proposed legislation comes into operation.

9. The Select Committee is of the view that the section 121 method is the preferred option. Planning for a grant of Statehood should proceed on this basis.

C. BASIC STEPS TO STATEHOOD

1. Given the critical constitutional role of the Commonwealth in effecting any grant of Statehood, it is clearly desirable to obtain in advance a public commitment from the Commonwealth Government to support the proposed grant.

2. Such a commitment is unlikely to be forthcoming unless there is demonstrable support in the Northern Territory for the proposed grant. To this end, the Select Committee concurs with the holding of a Territory referendum within a reasonable time to assess support for the proposal generally. Work already in progress in the Territory on the proposed grant should not be held up pending the holding of this referendum, but the continuance of that programme would be conditional ultimately upon a successful referendum result.

3. The Commonwealth should give an early undertaking to broaden the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Regulations to ensure that Ministers and the Legislative Assembly of the Territory have the necessary authority to enable planning to proceed with a view to seeking a grant of Statehood.

4. The Select Committee envisages that, two concurrent courses of action will take place in preparing for grant of Statehood:

(a) the preparation of a new State constitution; and

(b) the negotiation and conclusion of a Memorandum of Agreement between the Territory and Commonwealth Governments, incorporating the terms and conditions of the proposed grant.

5. The implementation of (a) above is already proceeding through the Select Committee. Part A of each of the Discussion Papers outlines and endorses the three stages for adopting a new State constitution. These are:

(i) the Committee will prepare a draft constitution for presentation to the Legislative Assembly. Options, where necessary, will be included.

(ii) the draft constitution will be put before a Territory Constitutional Convention. The Convention will be established by appropriate action of the Legislative Assembly and will include broad representation from across the Northern Territory community. It will receive the recommendations of the Legislative Assembly following debate on the Committee’s report, will discuss the proposals and ratify a final draft of the constitution.

(iii) the constitution as ratified by the Convention will be submitted to a referendum of Northern Territory electors for approval. This will be a subsequent referendum to that mentioned in paragraph 2 above.

The ability to legally adopt a new State constitution is dependant upon a specific grant of powers by the Commonwealth.

6. Concurrently with the preparation of the new State constitution, the Select Committee envisages that the Territory and Commonwealth Governments will negotiate and conclude a Memorandum of Agreement, incorporating the terms and conditions of the grant of Statehood; for implementation under section 121 of the Constitution.

This should provide for the new State to be placed in substantially the same constitutional position as existing States. It should not deal with matters more appropriately dealt with in the new State constitution.

7. Consultation with the existing States will also be necessary to seek their support to the proposed grant of Statehood, including in particular the proposals for representation of the new State in the Commonwealth Parliament and as to financial arrangements.

8. Once a new State constitution has been adopted and approved at a referendum, and the Memorandum of Agreement has been concluded, proposed legislation should be placed before the Commonwealth Parliament to give effect to the grant of Statehood. That legislation should accurately reflect the terms and conditions of the Memorandum of Agreement and should refer to, but not set out in full, the new State constitution.
That constitution should be part of new State law and not be part of a Commonwealth Act.

9. In the event that the legislation, as finally enacted by the Commonwealth Parliament, contains any significant variations from the terms and conditions contained in the Memorandum of Agreement, the legislation should provide that the grant of Statehood should not take effect until proclaimed, and that the proclamation is conditional upon a further referendum of Territory electors being carried. This would ensure that the Commonwealth Parliament did not impose any terms and conditions on the new State that were not acceptable to Territorians. In the absence of any such significant variations, the legislation should come into operation automatically on a specified date.

10. The Commonwealth Parliament should contemporaneously enact other legislation consequential upon the grant of Statehood to make any necessary changes to other existing legislation. A summary of possible changes to Commonwealth legislation is contained in F below.

11. Amendments to some Territory legislation may also be necessary, with effect from the grant of Statehood.

12. Prior to the grant taking effect, it will be necessary to hold elections for the new State representatives in both Houses of the Commonwealth Parliament (possibly in conjunction with a federal election) and to make any appointments that are to take effect on and from the grant (for example, the appointment of the new State Governor. Savings provisions can deal with the position of those officers and employees whose positions are to be continued on and from the grant (for example, judicial officers, public servants, etc). The question whether the Legislative Assembly is to be continued as the Parliament of the new State remains to be determined (see Discussion Paper No. 1).

D. SELECTED PROVISIONS FROM THE COMMONWEALTH CONSTITUTION

"7. The Senate shall be composed of senators for each State, directly chosen by the people of the State, voting, until the Parliament otherwise provides, as one electorate.

But until the Parliament of the Commonwealth otherwise provides, the Parliament of the State of Queensland, if that State be an Original State, may make laws dividing the State into divisions and determining the number of senators to be chosen for each division, and in the absence of such provision the State shall be one electorate.

Until the Parliament otherwise provides there shall be six senators for each Original State. The Parliament may make laws increasing or diminishing the number of senators for each State, but so that equal representation of the several Original States shall be maintained and that no Original State shall have less than six: senators.

The senators shall be chosen for a term of six years, and the names of the senators chosen for each State shall be certified by the Governor to the Governor-General."
"24. The House of Representatives shall be composed of members directly chosen by the people of the Commonwealth, and the number of such members shall be, as nearly as practicable, twice the number of the senators.

The number of members chosen in the several States shall be in proportion to the respective numbers of their people, and shall, until the Parliament otherwise provides, be determined, whenever necessary, in the following manner:-

(i) A quota shall be ascertained by dividing the number of the people of the Commonwealth, as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth, by twice the number of the senators:

(ii) The number of members to be chosen in each State shall be determined by dividing the number of the people of the State, as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth, by the quota; and if on such division there is a remainder greater than one-half of the quota, one more member shall be chosen in the State.

But notwithstanding anything in this section, five members at least shall be chosen in each Original State."

"121. The Parliament may admit to the Commonwealth or establish new States, and may upon such admission or establishment make or impose such terms and conditions, including the extent of representation in either House of the Parliament, as it thinks fit."

"128. This Constitution shall not be altered except in the following manner:-

The proposed law for the alteration thereof must be passed by an absolute majority of each House of the Parliament, and not less than two nor more than six months after its passage through both Houses the proposed law shall be submitted in each State and Territory to the electors qualified to vote for the election of members of the House of Representatives.

But if either House passes any such proposed law by an absolute majority, and the other House rejects or fails to pass it, or passes it with any amendment to which the first-mentioned House will not agree, and if after an interval of three months the first-mentioned House in the same or the next session again passes the proposed law by an absolute majority with or without any amendment which has been made or agreed to by the other House, and such other House rejects or fails to pass it or passes it with any amendment to which the first-mentioned House will not agree, the Governor-General may submit the proposed law as last proposed by the first-mentioned House, and either with or without any amendments subsequently agreed to by both Houses, to the electors in each State and Territory qualified to vote for the election of the House of Representatives.

When a proposed law is submitted to the electors the vote shall be taken in such manner as the Parliament prescribes. But until the qualification of electors of members of the House of Representatives becomes uniform throughout the Commonwealth, only one-half" the electors voting for and against the proposed law shall be counted in any State in which adult suffrage prevails.

And if in a majority of the States a majority of the electors voting approve the proposed law, and if a majority of all electors voting also approve the proposed law, it shall be presented to the Governor-General for the Queen's assent.

No alteration diminishing the proportionate representation of any State in either House of the Parliament, or the minimum number of representatives of a State in the House of Representatives, or increasing, diminishing, or otherwise altering the limits of the State, or in any manner affecting the provisions of the Constitution in relation thereto, shall become law unless the majority of the electors voting in that State approve the proposed law.

In this section, "Territory" means any territory referred to in section one hundred and twenty-two of this Constitution in respect of which there is in force a law allowing its representation in the House of Representatives.

E. POSSIBLE CHANGES TO COMMONWEALTH LEGISLATION

It is clear that a number of items of Commonwealth legislation will require amendment upon a grant of Statehood to the Northern Territory.

It is not possible at this stage to be precise about the nature and extent of these amendments. This is because -

(a) final policy positions have not yet been arrived at and agreed with the Commonwealth in the various key areas affected by Commonwealth legislation and relating to the grant;

(b) Commonwealth legislation may change prior to the grant.

It is, however, possible to identify most of the legislation and to indicate in broad terms the nature of the amendments which may be required. The legislation is listed below.

1. Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978 and Regulations

Probable complete repeal of this Act. Query, whether certain institutions and officers established or appointed under that Act will be continued on and from the grant of Statehood.

2. Northern Territory Acceptance Act 1910

Possible consequential amendments to this Act only, to reflect the change in status from a Commonwealth territory to a new State.

3. Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act 1976

On current proposals contained in the paper "Land Matters upon Statehood", this Act would be patriated to the new State as part of its law.
4. Petermann Aboriginal Land Trust (Boundaries) Act 1985

   Possible consequential amendments may be required to this Act as a result of 3 above only.

5. Coastal Waters (Northern Territory Powers) Act 1980 Coastal Waters (Northern Territory Title) Act 1980

6. National Parks and Wildlife Conservation Act 1975 and Regulations

   On current proposals contained in the paper "Land Matters upon Statehood", this Act would require substantial Amendment to reflect the transfer of National Parks in the Northern Territory from Commonwealth to new State ownership and control and to terminate the special application of this Act to the Northern Territory.

   These Acts to be repealed with appropriate savings.

8. Northern Territory (Commonwealth Lands) Act 1980

   Consequential amendment to this Act may be desirable to reflect the fact that the relevant land is now vested in the new State.

9. Lands Acquisition Act 1955 Lands Acquisition (N.T. Pastoral Leases) Act 1981

   Consequential amendments to these Acts are required to treat the Northern Territory in the same way as the States. It may be necessary to amend the latter Act to reflect the fact that the relevant land is now vested in the new State.

10. Atomic Energy Act 1953

    Under this Act, unlike the States, ownership of uranium and other prescribed substances in the Northern Territory remains with the Commonwealth. This Act would need substantial amendment to reflect the current proposals that ownership and control of uranium and other prescribed substances in the Territory are to be transferred to the new State, together with the Ranger licence granted under the Act.

11. Koongarra Project Area Act 1981

    Possible consequential amendments may be required to this Act as a result of 10 above.
12. Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918
Representation Act 1983

Substantial amendments will be required to these Acts to facilitate representation of the new State in both Houses of the Commonwealth Parliament and to terminate existing Territorial representation. This includes a consideration as to whether Cocos (Keeling) Islands and Christmas Island Territories, which are presently included with the Northern Territory for federal electoral purposes, are to be incorporated as part of the new State, thus enabling a continuation of these electoral arrangements, or are to be incorporated with the A.C.T. or some other State, or are to be left as separate territories.

Consequential amendments to this Act to reflect the status of the new State for the purpose of referendums.

14. Ashmore and Cartier Islands Acceptance Act 1933

On current proposals, this Act probably would require repeal with appropriate savings, to enable the Territory to be incorporated in the new State.

15. Judiciary Act 1903

Consequential amendments to this Act to reflect the status of the new State and to delete special provision applicable to the Northern Territory and to the Northern Territory Supreme Court, and to provide for Appeals from the Supreme Court of the new State to the High Court on the same basis as other State Supreme Courts.

16. Family Law Act 1975

Amendment of this Act to ensure that the present jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the Northern Territory is carried over to the Supreme Court of the new State.

17. Bankruptcy Act 1966

Consequential amendments to this Act as to the jurisdiction of the Courts of the new State.

18. Acts Interpretation Act 1901

Consequential Amendments to this Act to ensure that any reference to a State in Commonwealth laws prima facie includes the new State.

Possible amendment of this Act to make it clear that it extends to the new State.
20. Ombudsman Act 1976
Administrative Appeals Tribunal Act 1975
Administrative Decisions (Judicial Review) Act 1977

Appropriate amendments to these Acts to delete entirely their application to new State laws and actions thereunder.

21. States Grants (General Revenue) Act 1985 (or its successor)
Commonwealth Grants Commission Act 1973

Consequential amendments to these Acts to place the new State in the same position as the existing States, subject to any special financial arrangements negotiated upon Statehood.

22. Financial Agreement Acts

Amendments to this Act or a new Act to facilitate the acceptance of the new State as a party to the Financial Agreement and the Loan Council.

23. Payroll Tax (Territories) Act 1971
Payroll Tax (Territories Assessment Act 1971
Commonwealth Authorities (Northern Territory Pay-roll Tax) Act 1979

Consequential amendments may be required to these Acts.

24. Superannuation Act 1976 and Regulations

It is assumed that there will still be a number of officers employed by the new State, being officers formerly employed by the Northern Territory; or by Northern Territory authorities, who will continue as "eligible members" in the C.S.S. by arrangement with the Northern Territory, they not having elected to join NTGPA. This will necessitate the continued operation of the Superannuation Act 1976 and Regulations in respect of these officers in the new State, with appropriate amendments to reflect this continued operation.

25. Public Service Act 1922
Commonwealth Teaching Service Act 1972

Depending on the decisions made as to the continuing status of compulsorily transferred employees as from the grant of Statehood, amendments may be required to the relevant provisions of the above two Acts.

26. Conciliation and Arbitration Act 1904

Depending on the decisions taken as to the industrial powers of the new State, it will probably be necessary to amend this Act in conjunction with the repeal of section 53 of the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978.

27. Advisory Council for Inter-Governmental Relations Act 1976

Consequential amendments to this Act to reflect the change in status to a new State.
28. Transfer of Prisoners Act 1983

Consequential amendments to this Act to reflect the status of the Northern Territory as a new State.

29. Australian National Airlines Act 1945

Given some of the services of Australian Airlines are provided in reliance upon the territories power in Section 122 of the Constitution, the continued operation or those services may depend on appropriate amendments to this Act or other Commonwealth legislation, or alternatively on legislative support by the new State.

30. Air Navigation Act 1922 and Regulations

Consequential amendments may be required to this legislation to reflect the status of the new State.

Possible consequential amendments to this Act.

32. Commonwealth Motor Vehicles (Liability) Act 1959

Consequential amendments to this Act required.

33. Railways Standardisation (South Australian Agreement) Act 1949

This Act incorporates an agreement with South Australia to construct a standard gauge railway to Darwin. It parallels a similar agreement scheduled to the Northern Territory, Acceptance Act 1910 (see above). Depending on the arrangements made with the Commonwealth at Statehood, it may be necessary to amend this Act.

Consequential amendments only to this Act to reflect the status of the new State.

35. Tertiary Education Commission Act 1977

Depending on decisions taken as to the status of the University College on Statehood, amendments may be required to this Act.

F. TERMS OF REFERENCE

Whereas this Assembly is of the opinion that when the Northern Territory of Australia becomes a new State it should do so as a member of the federation on terms resulting in equality with the other States with its people having the same constitutional rights, privileges, entitlements and responsibilities as the people of the existing States;

And Whereas in so far as it is constitutionally possible the equality should apply as on the date of the grant of Statehood to the new State;
And Whereas it is necessary to draft a new State constitution;

(I) A Select Committee be established to inquire into, report and make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on:

(A) A constitution for the new state and the principles upon which it should be drawn, including:

(I) legislative power;
(II) executive powers; and
(III) judicial powers; and
(IV) the method to be adopted to have a draft new State constitution approved by or on behalf of the people of the Northern Territory; and

(B) The issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the federation as a new state.

SCHEDULE 1 4-9

SCHEDULE 2 4-17
A. INTRODUCTION

1. Terms of Reference

On 28 August, 1985, the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory of Australia by resolution established the Select Committee on Constitutional Development. Amendments to the Committee's terms of reference were made when the Committee was reconstituted on 28 April 1987 following the March 1987 election. The main portion of the Committee's current terms of reference is set out in Part E below. The resolutions were passed in conjunction with proposals then being developed in the Northern Territory for a grant of Statehood to the Territory within the Australian federal system. The terms of reference include provision for the Select Committee to inquire into and to report and make recommendations on the issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the federation as a new State, this being in addition to its main task in relation to a new State constitution.

2. Discussion and Information Papers

(a) The Select Committee decided to issue a number of discussion papers for public comment on matters arising from the terms of reference. Two such discussion papers have already been issued, as follows:

* A Discussion Paper on a Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory

The purpose of these papers is to invite public comment with a view to assisting the Committee to make recommendations on a new State constitution and the procedure for adopting it.

(b) The Select Committee has also issued an abbreviated paper, with illustrations, based on the first of those discussion papers, entitled "Proposals for a new State Constitution for the Northern Territory".

(c) The Select Committee is also desirous of issuing information papers to the public on issues relevant to a grant of Statehood to the Northern Territory by way of background, to assist members of the public in formulating their views on the various matters of importance. The Select Committee has already issued one such information paper, as follows:

* Information Paper No. 1, Options for a Grant of Statehood.

(d) This further information paper constitutes the second in this series, and deals with the matter of how a new State constitution can be entrenched; that is, how such a constitution can be made in a manner that limits the powers, whether of the Commonwealth or of the new State, to amend it in the future. The purpose of this paper is not to discuss the type of provisions that could be entrenched.
To some extent, the subject of entrenchment has already been discussed in the first of the discussion papers mentioned above, dealing with a proposed new State constitution for the Northern Territory. The subject of entrenchment in relation to the legislature was dealt with in Part E paragraph 3 of that paper. That same subject, in relation to the judiciary, was dealt with in Part O of that paper. The subject of entrenchment generally was dealt with in Parts P and Q of that paper. The Committee also dealt with the recognition of local and community government in a new State constitution (Part R), the entrenchment of guarantees of Aboriginal ownership of land and possibly other Aboriginal rights in the new State constitution (Part S) and invited comment on the possible inclusion of other guarantees of human rights in that constitution (Part T). It is not proposed to deal further with these matters in this paper, although public comment is still invited upon them.

3. The Merits of Entrenchment

(a) A "constitution" is the fundamental legal document of any social or political entity, governing its existence and operation and establishing its rights and obligations and those of its members. In the Select Committee's view, there is considerable merit in the suggestion that such a fundamental law should not be easy to change. Rather, it is a law that in some respects is more akin to Aboriginal traditional law, a law that should continue into the future. It should not be subject to the whim of the legislators at any particular future point in time who might perceive some need for change for some limited or narrow purpose.

(b) The Select Committee took the view in the first discussion paper that, generally speaking, it favoured some degree of entrenchment of the whole of the new State constitution. The constitution should be a document that is accorded special status in the law and should only deal with those matters considered to be of vital importance in the functioning of the new State and its institutions. Matters of lesser importance should be relegated to ordinary legislation.

(c) The Select Committee added that entrenchment should comprise or include the requirement that any proposed change be submitted to and be supported by a specified majority of new State electors at a referendum. It may be considered appropriate that for certain provisions, any change may require more than a simple majority of voters in any referendum. Certain minimal provisions would be necessary dealing with referendums in the new State constitution (Part P, paragraph 1(d) and (e) at pages 82-83).

(d) The mechanism of entrenchment may be thought more important to some sections of the Territory public than others. For example, the Select Committee is aware that Aboriginal people maintaining traditional lifestyles are particularly concerned about their land, law, language and religion. Entrenchment in a constitution can provide a legal method of safeguarding these interests and removing them from the control of politicians.
4. Double Entrenchment

(a) The Select Committee considers it to be desirable that, whatever the method chosen of amending the new State constitution (i.e. referendum or some other method), that method should itself be entrenched in the new State constitution. This is known as "double entrenchment". It ensures that amendment of the constitution by some other method cannot be achieved by changing the amendment mechanism itself. This is in effect the position under the Commonwealth Constitution.

(b) On the basis of the Select Committee's views referred to above, the provision in the new State constitution dealing with the method of amendment should be such that both it and the rest of that constitution are only capable of being changed by a referendum of new State electors.

B. THE COMMONWEALTH CONSTITUTION AND ENTRENCHMENT

1. Prior to federation in 1901, each of the Self-governing Australian colonies had their own constitutions, with powers (subject to Royal reservation and assent) of amendment vested in the colonial legislatures. No referenda were required for change.

2. Section 106 of the Commonwealth Constitution was designed to continue those colonial constitutions at federation as State constitutions, subject only to the provisions of the Commonwealth Constitution. Section 106 provides -

   "The Constitution of each State of the Commonwealth shall, subject to this Constitution, continue as at the establishment of the Commonwealth, or as at the admission or establishment of the State, as the case may be, until altered in accordance with the Constitution of the State."

3. It is to be observed that section 106 also continues, subject to the Commonwealth Constitution, the constitution of a new State as at its admission or establishment.

4. In addition to section 106, the Commonwealth Constitution in sections 107 and 108 also continued the powers of the Colonial Parliaments that became States and their colonial laws. However these sections may not apply to the Northern Territory if it becomes a State, as it is doubtful that the Northern Territory has the status of a "colony" for the purposes of these sections.

5. It seems clear that section 106 is intended to have a continuing effect in relation to State constitutions. That is, the protection given by that section continues to operate in respect of a State constitution during the continued existence of that State.

6. However there are a number of legal questions concerning the correct interpretation of section 106, the answers to which are not clear, as follows :-

   (a) Does the section only operate to guarantee State constitutions that were in operation prior to the grant of Statehood? Put another way, does the section protect new State constitutions that only became legally operational at the time... of the grant of Statehood, or is it necessary for those constitutions to have been in operation before that time?

(b) Does the section only guarantee State constitutions contained in documents that are so labelled as the "Constitution" of those States? In other words, is the label critically important for the purpose of the section, or does the section extend to protect any new State laws of a "constitutional" nature?

(c) Are all provisions contained in State constitutions guaranteed by the section, or is the guarantee limited to only certain types of provisions. For example, does the section only extend to provisions dealing with the basic framework of the principal State institutions? Alternatively, does the section go further to protect, for example, provisions in State constitutions dealing with State powers or limitations on State powers?

(d) What is the effect of the reference in the section which makes it "subject to this (the Commonwealth) Constitution"? Does this mean that the section and the protection it affords to State constitutions can be overridden by the exercise of the legislative powers of the Commonwealth Parliament?

7. The greatest concern is of course the danger that the Commonwealth Parliament might seek to legislate after Statehood in a way that directly affects the provisions of the new State constitution. There is judicial authority to support the view that, section 106 notwithstanding, the Commonwealth Parliament can validly enact legislation of general application under some federal head of legislative power which only incidentally affects a State constitution. How far the Commonwealth Parliament can go beyond this is not clear. It is to be noted that the main source of federal legislative power in section 51 of the Commonwealth Constitution is itself expressed to be "subject to this Constitution".

8. The latter issue in paragraph 7 would be particularly important if a State constitution entrenched certain provisions, such as Aboriginal traditional ownership of land, and the Commonwealth Parliament sought, by ordinary legislation enacted under a federal head of legislative power, to alter the effect of those provisions. Although arguably the Commonwealth legislation would be invalid, the issue is not beyond doubt.

9. On one legal view, an effect of section 106 is to incorporate State constitutions into the Commonwealth Constitution as if they were all part of the same document. If this view is correct, it would seem to follow that State constitutions could be amended by successfully using the national referendum procedure in section 128 of the Commonwealth Constitution. There is a further question whether this gives rise to the inference that State constitutions can only be amended by such a national referendum or, as contemplated in the wording of section 106 itself, by the mechanism for amendment contained in those State constitutions.

powers and their exercise, and not just the State judicial institutions themselves. This reinforces the view that State constitutions, including provisions therein that relate to the exercise of powers by the essential constitutional organs of that State and the protection of civil rights which those organs assure to citizens, are protected by section 106.

11. Apart from section 106, the High Court has developed a doctrine by implication from the Commonwealth Constitution designed to protect the States. This doctrine prevents the Commonwealth Parliament from legislating in a way that discriminates against States and their agencies by placing on them special burdens or disabilities, or that operates to destroy or curtail their continued existence or their capacity to function as governments. However it is not clear how far the protection of section 106 extends beyond this doctrine. This doctrine has been successfully relied upon in two court cases. There has been less reliance by the existing States on section 106 in litigation.

12. There is a further consideration in relation to new States only. Once a new State is admitted or established under section 121 of the Commonwealth Constitution, and the Commonwealth Parliament has passed the necessary legislation granting Statehood and fixing the terms and conditions of the grant, there is a view that the Commonwealth Parliament may not thereafter be able to legislate to alter these constitutional arrangements. The power under section 121 can only be exercised at the time of the grant and once exercised it is said to be exhausted. This may provide added support for the view that the Commonwealth Parliament could not, by subsequent ordinary legislation, affect the constitutional provisions applicable to the new State. However, as no new State has ever been created in Australia before, the correctness of this view is uncertain.

13. The matters raised in this Part were referred for a legal opinion to Professor Colin Howard. A copy of his opinion dated 29 June 1989 is set out in Schedule 1 to this Information Paper. A copy of subsequent correspondence to and from Professor Howard clarifying the application of two recent cases is set out in Schedule 2 to this Information Paper.

C. EFFECT OF ENTRENCHMENT ON NEW STATES

1. It is clear that a new State can be legally bound by its constitution, including any special entrenchment provisions (such as those requiring a referendum for change) contained in that constitution. The rights and obligations contained in a new State constitution would as a result be binding on the new State, its Parliament and Government, and any breach of those rights and obligations would be enforceable in the courts in accordance with the terms of that constitution.

2. This binding effect referred to in paragraph 1 above may be achieved by one or more of the following methods -

   (a) Under section 6 of the Australia Act 1986, which is binding on both existing and new States (see the definition of "State" in section 16(1) of that Act to include new States), a law made by the Parliament of a State as to the constitution, powers and procedures of that Parliament is of no force and effect unless it is made in the "manner and form" required by a law made by that Parliament.

If the constitution of the new State had effect as a law of the Parliament of the new State, and if that constitution also required a successful referendum for any change before that change was carried into effect by legislation of the Parliament, it would be a "manner and form" provision within section 6. As such, the new State and its Parliament would be legally bound to observe the referendum requirement.

(b) Such entrenchment may also be binding on a new State as a consequence of the wording of section 106 of the Commonwealth Constitution (see Part B above), in that it provides that the new State constitution should continue "until altered in accordance with the Constitution of the (new) State".

(c) Further, Commonwealth legislation granting Statehood under section 121 of the Commonwealth Constitution could itself make it clear that the new State was bound by the terms of its own constitution.

D. EFFECT OF ENTRENCHMENT ON COMMONWEALTH

1. As indicated in Part B, the extent to which the Commonwealth, its Parliament and Government, are bound by the provisions of State constitutions is a matter of some legal uncertainty. This uncertainty extends to the constitution of a new State created under section 121 of the Commonwealth Constitution although, as discussed above, there may be an added reason to support a limitation on Commonwealth power in this regard.

2. There would at least be some reticence on the part of the Commonwealth to seek to override entrenched new State constitutional provisions, given these doubts and the risks inherent in any resulting litigation.

3. The Commonwealth would also have to consider the effect of any constitutional guarantees already contained or implied in the Commonwealth Constitution. Thus, for example, if the entrenched provisions included guarantees of Aboriginal traditional ownership of land and if the Commonwealth sought to modify those provisions, there would be the added consideration that the Commonwealth must provide just terms if its legislation results in the acquisition of property in terms of section 51(xxxi) of the Commonwealth Constitution. The effect of the doctrine already referred to in Part B paragraph 11 would also have to be considered.

4. Whether a future Commonwealth Parliament would ever seek to override entrenched provisions in a new State constitution of course involves not only legal considerations, but also political and other considerations. Given the methodology proposed by the Select Committee for the adoption of a new State constitution in the Northern Territory, involving substantial involvement and support from within the Territory community, there may well be strong resistance to any such Commonwealth intrusion.
This resistance may be reflected in any increased federal Parliamentary representation that the new State may have.

5. If the above factors are not considered to be adequate, and if it desired to remove all doubts as to the inability of the Commonwealth to directly interfere with a new State constitution, the only solution presently available would be to remove those doubts by way of an amendment to the Commonwealth Constitution as a consequence of a successful national referendum. For several reasons, the Select Committee does not at this stage favour a national referendum on Statehood (see Information Paper No. 1, Part B at pages 3–4), or for that matter on any particular aspect of Statehood, although it invites comment on this matter.

E. TERMS OF REFERENCE

Whereas this Assembly is of the opinion that when the Northern Territory of Australia becomes a new State it should do so as a member of the federation on terms resulting in equality with the other States with its people having the same constitutional rights, privileges, entitlements and responsibilities as the people of the existing States;

And Whereas in so far as it is constitutionally possible the equality should apply as on the date of the grant of Statehood to the new State;

And Whereas it is necessary to draft a new State constitution;

(1) A Select Committee be established to inquire into, report and make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on:

A. A constitution for the new State and the principles upon which it should be drawn, including:

   (I) legislative power;

   (II) executive powers;

   (III) judicial powers; and

   (IV) the method to be adopted to have a draft new State constitution approved by or on behalf of the people of the Northern Territory; and

B. The issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the federation as a new State.
Information Paper No. 2 —
Entrenchment of a New State Constitution
1. I am asked to advise the Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory of Australia on Constitutional Development, a bipartisan committee of the Legislative Assembly. I am indebted to instructing solicitor for the background material, discussion paper and citations which accompany the brief.

2. In general terms the advice sought is on the extent to which the constitution of a new State, formerly the Northern Territory but admitted to Statehood under s.121 of the Commonwealth Constitution, would be constitutionally protected from subsequent Commonwealth legislation. My advice is to include consideration of six topics specifically mentioned in the brief.

3. It is apparent from the background materials that the Committee's advice to the Legislative Assembly in due course may include recommendations that a number of the provisions of the proposed State constitution for the Northern Territory be entrenched, the method of entrenchment envisaged being by way of referendum requiring a specified majority for its passage. As I understand the matter, the cause of concern to which my advice is to be directed is whether such entrenched provisions would be vulnerable to being overridden by Commonwealth legislation enacted within the scope of the legislative powers of the Australian Parliament. I am nevertheless not asked to confine my advice to entrenched provisions but to consider generally the situation of a new State constitution with respect to subsequent Commonwealth legislation. This being the nature of the problem, it is convenient to proceed in the first instance by taking up the particular matters specially mentioned in the brief.

4. The extent to which s.106 of the Commonwealth Constitution protects a new State constitution. For convenience of reference I reproduce the text of s.106.

   The Constitution of each State of the Commonwealth shall, subject to this Constitution, continue as at the establishment of the Commonwealth, or as at the admission or the establishment of the State, as the case may be, until altered in accordance with the Constitution of the State.

5. I agree with instructing solicitor that although the primary purpose of s.106 appears to have been to preserve continuity between the pre-federation colonial constitutions of the original States and their post-federation State constitutions, except to the extent that they were necessarily altered by the fact of federation, the section is not well drafted to express this purpose. In support of that interpretation, and I agree, instructing solicitor cites Victoria v. Commonwealth (1971) 122 C.L.R. 353, 371-2, 386; New South Wales v. Commonwealth (1975) 135 C.L.R. 337, 372; and Western Australia v. Wilsmore (1981) 33 A.L.R. 13, 16.
6. In para. 3 of my previous advice dated 31 October 1986 I expressed the opinion, which I still hold, that no particular significance is to be attached to the contrast between the words "admission" and "establishment" which appear in both s.121 and s.106 of the Commonwealth Constitution. Nevertheless it serves to emphasize that the power to admit new States encompasses not only new States formed within Australia but also new States added by territorial expansion of Australia. In the latter category New Zealand was the most prominent possibility at the time of federation. In my view, in such a case s.106 has basically much the same constitutional effect on the new State as it did on the original States. That is to say, the section has the effect of continuing the pre-federation constitution of the new State except to the extent that it is necessarily modified by the fact of becoming a State and, to some extent perhaps, by terms and conditions imposed under s.121.

7. It will be recalled also from my previous advice, passim, that the terms and conditions available under s.121 do not extend to imposing upon a new State any restriction which would preclude it from being properly described as, or from having the status of, a State within the meaning of the Commonwealth Constitution. I am still of the same opinion on this point too and observe in the present context that it harmonizes with the apparent intention and effect of s.106 as well as of s.121.

8. The question becomes therefore whether a similar mode of interpretation can be extended to the remaining category, the case of a new State being formed from an area within Australia, specifically in this instance the Northern Territory. One immediate difference from the preceding situations is that the concept of the constitution which is notionally to be continued is of itself less clear was than the case with the original States or would be the case with such a separate body politic as New Zealand. In those instances the prospective new State already has a reasonably well defined constitution which derives from a history wholly independent of the Commonwealth. That is not the case with the Northern Territory.

9. Whatever the precise content of any former constitution which is continued by virtue of s.106, the argument is strong that the intention and effect of s.106 is to preserve at least part of that constitution independently of the Commonwealth Constitution; and see the citations in para. 5 above. It is not possible to apply this line of thought to the Northern Territory because constitutionally it exists in consequence only of the Commonwealth Constitution and of Commonwealth legislation thereunder. There is nothing constitutionally independent of those sources to continue. In this situation it can be argued that the establishment of the former Territory as a State cannot alter the legislative quality of its pre-State constitution: it was Commonwealth legislation before Statehood, hence its continuation must mean that it remains Commonwealth legislation after Statehood. If this argument is correct, the new State's constitution in such a case can be further argued to be subject not merely to amendment by referendum under s.128 (a danger which may be shared by all States notwithstanding s.106) but by an ordinary exercise of Commonwealth legislative power.

10. In my opinion such an argument overlooks a fundamental feature of admission as a new State. I refer again to my previous advice. The interpretation of s.121 which I there advanced, and which I still believe to be the correct understanding of that section, depended ultimately upon the meaning to be attached to the use of the word
"State" not merely in s.121 but throughout the Commonwealth Constitution. Section 106 is expressly subject to the Constitution and is therefore subject to s.121, which includes no such limitation. It follows that the reference to States in s.106 must be read in the same sense as in s.121.

11. It follows further that any argument that after its establishment as a State the new State, whatever its origins, remains subject to Commonwealth legislative power to any greater extent than any other State is inconsistent with s.121 and therefore also with s.106. It follows further that the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978 cannot be validly continued by the Commonwealth Parliament as an incident of the admission of the Northern Territory to Statehood because that statute is manifestly inadequate for, and indeed in many respects inconsistent with, the status of being a State of the Australian federation.

12. Some of the difficulties that have been thought to arise out of s.106, as applied to the Northern Territory case, are the consequence, as with s.121, of its interpretation having been approached in too narrow a context. Discussion has hitherto been much conditioned by the unique situation of the original States in light of their former status as colonies. The constitutional consequences which have flowed from that status, particularly the peculiar and often obscure post-federation relation of the original States with the United Kingdom, have no relevance to the application of s.106 to the admission to Statehood of the Northern Territory.

13. The problem presented by the pre-federation colonial constitutions of the original States was how, and to what extent, to cut down the operation of those constitutions to a point where, as separate bodies politic, the status of the original States became consistent with the terms of the Commonwealth Constitution. By contrast the problem presented by the Northern Territory, in order that its constitution after admission to Statehood should be consistent with s.106, is not how to cut it down to Statehood but how to enlarge it up to Statehood. This can hardly be done by continuing anything. In my view it can be done only by designing an entirely new document, consistent with the status of Statehood, which upon the admission or establishment of the Northern Territory as a State becomes, in the words of s.106, "the Constitution of the State".

14. Although I agree with instructing solicitor that s.106 would be clearer if it referred to "as from" instead of "as at" the establishment of the new State, I see no particular difficulty in ensuring that a wholly new constitution becomes the instrument which is treated technically as having been continued by s.106. In all probability all that is needed is to include in the Commonwealth statute which enacts it an expression to the effect that the constitution is deemed to be the constitution of the new State as at the moment of its admission or establishment. Alternatively the wording could be taken from s.121 and refer to the new constitution becoming the new State's constitution immediately "upon" its admission or establishment. Yet another possibility is to combine the two into some such composite expression as "upon and at" admission or establishment.

15. Under this head therefore I arrive at the following conclusions:-
(i) the appropriate Commonwealth power to establish the new State and enact all matters incidental thereto derives from s.121 of the Commonwealth Constitution;

(ii) the appropriate mode of proceeding is to enact the constitution of the new State as an original document expressed to take effect simultaneously with the coming into existence of the new State;

(iii) such a constitution would receive the same protection from s.106 of the Commonwealth Constitution as the constitution of any other State in the matter of its alteration;

(iv) and, if it be relevant, it is undesirable to complicate the matter by any reliance on s.122 of the Commonwealth Constitution because (a) there is no need to do so, and (b) it is unlikely that a law for the government of a prospective new State is properly characterized as also a law for the government of a territory.

16. The extent to which the implied immunity of the States from discriminatory Commonwealth legislation protects a new State constitution.

The origin and basis of this rule are set out in Howard, Australian Federal Constitutional Law, 3rd ed., at pp. 173-180. Its origin is the judgment of Dixon J. in the State Banking Case, Melbourne Corporation v. Commonwealth (1947) 74 CLR 31, 82-4. His views were effectively adopted by the rest of the court in the following year in the Bank Nationalization Case, Bank of New South Wales v. Commonwealth (1948) 76 CLR 1. Since then the existence of the rule has not been doubted but the High Court has declined several invitations to apply it (Howard, 180-183).

17. There is neither reason nor authority to suggest that a new State would be any less entitled than an original State to rely on the discrimination immunity. My understanding of s.121 similarly supports that view. The rule is that the Commonwealth, by virtue of the very fact of federation, cannot enact a law which singles out the States, or presumably any one or more of them, in a manner which restricts or controls them in the exercise of their executive government powers. So much is well established in principle. It does not however fully answer the question asked of me, which is directed to protection of the whole of the new State's constitution, not only its executive power.

18. In its own terms, and on the facts of the cases cited in paragraph 16 above, the discrimination rule does not extend so far. Yet in some circumstances it surely must apply. By definition a Commonwealth law which purports to amend a State constitution in a manner which restricts, controls or prohibits the exercise of a State power of any description must be a discriminatory law, for it cannot apply to the population at large.

19. If this be correct, the question next arises whether a State, by entrenching certain rights or guarantees in its constitution in the manner previously referred to, can exclude the operation of a Commonwealth law on subject matters otherwise within its scope. In the case of a new State of the description now in contemplation this question is less complicated than with an original State because there is no need for uncertainty about what is its constitution.

20. A distinction has to be drawn between a Commonwealth law which purports to operate directly upon the entrenched clause in the State constitution and a law which operates upon a different subject matter in a manner which effectively nullifies the safeguard of the entrenched clause. In light of both s.106 and the discrimination doctrine it seems clear that a purported law of the former variety would be ineffective. A law of the latter variety of general application however would be prima facie effective pursuant to the relevant legislative power of the Commonwealth, supported if necessary by the inconsistency rule of s.109.

21. Entrenched guarantees in a State constitution would normally be construed as limited in their operation to the State legislature. The case we are considering however does suggest other possibilities. They arise out of the novel character of the conversion of the Northern Territory into a new State and the accompanying need to draft an entirely new constitution.

22. One is that if clear guarantees on such matters as those mentioned in my instructions, namely, land rights, sacred sites, customary law, religion and language, were included in the new constitution in a suitably entrenched form they could be said to go the essential character of the new State: the type of society within the general Australian framework which that particular State wished to be. From this it could be argued that a Commonwealth law which effectively negated any of the entrenched guarantees would be invalid to that extent in its application to the new State. In that form the argument would have to rest upon implication, either as an extension of the existing discrimination doctrine or as a new but closely analogous doctrine.

23. Alternatively the same result might be reached by relying on the terms and conditions clause of s.121. It can be said that it is contrary to the clear import of s.121, particularly taken in conjunction with s.106, that the Commonwealth, having neglected opportunity before the admission of the new State to require modifications to its proposed constitution, should subsequently be able to enact legislation which effectively nullifies an important part of that constitution.

24. A further alternative is the argument that the Commonwealth legislation in question directly contravenes s.106, and is to that extent invalid, because it prevents the State constitution from continuing as at the establishment of the State. The natural assumption, if one reads s.106 without such a problem as the present in mind, is that the word "continue" has exactly the same range of reference as the word "altered". It is apparent from s.128 that the word "alter" in the Commonwealth Constitution means formally amend. Hence the most obvious application of "continue" is to preserve State Constitutions from formal amendment by the Commonwealth, except possibly under s.128. This is not necessarily its only application.

25. Unquestionably a great deal has changed since 1901 in the practical operation of the State constitutions insofar as that bears upon relations between the Commonwealth and the States and their respective powers. The changes owe much to High Court interpretation and to the operation of s.109 of the Commonwealth Constitution. But owing to the vagueness of the concept of the constitutions of the original States, and the absence from them of any such guarantees as those under discussion, the present question has never arisen. That question is whether formally entrenched guarantees in a State constitution, which formed part of that constitution as at the establishment of the State and operate in restriction of its legislative powers, are protected by s.106 from being set at naught by Commonwealth legislation on the ground that such an event would be a discontinuance of the State constitution even though accomplished without formal amendment.

26. Notwithstanding anything said by Isaacs J. in R.v. Barger (1908) 6 CLR 41, 83, and A-G for Queensland v. A-G for the Commonwealth (1915) 20 CLR 148, 172, in a different era of constitutional interpretation, the matter is not settled in favour of Commonwealth legislative power by the "subject to this Constitution" clause of s.106. The main source of relevant Commonwealth legislative power is s.51, which is similarly subject to the Constitution. The two sections cannot be subject to each other, so the two reservations cancel each other out, cf Australian Railways Union v. Victorian Railways Commissioners (1930) 44 CLR 319, 392, Dixon J.

27. Neither does it assist to contend that a State cannot extend constitutional protection to a matter merely by including it in its Constitution Act. Guarantees of the kind under consideration are unquestionably proper objects of constitutional protection. Doubts which have arisen about the scope of constitutional protection accorded to the original States by s.106, cf Evatt J. in Stuart-Robertson v. Lloyd (1932) 47 CLR 382, 491-2, and NSW v. Bardolph (1934) 52 CLR 455, 459-60, have been a natural consequence of uncertainty about what s.106 means when it refers to the constitutions of the original States. Such doubts need not arise in the present case.

28. Although, therefore, the argument that Commonwealth laws which effectively nullified entrenched guarantees in the constitution of the new State would be in direct conflict with s.106 is novel, and for that reason devoid of authority, the question which it raises is by no means unimportant or the suggested solution far-fetched. I include it in this advice as a serious contention without suggesting, of course, that it would necessarily carry the day any more than the arguments outlined in paragraphs 22, 23 and 24 hereof.

29. Under this head therefore I arrive at the following conclusions:-

(i) the constitution of a new State would be protected to at least the same extent as the constitutions, whatever they may be thought to be, of the original States by the discriminatory legislation doctrine

(ii) in practice the degree of protection is likely to be greater, especially if that doctrine is combined with s.106 of the Commonwealth Constitution, because matters which in character can be legitimately regarded as having constitutional status, including guarantees of various kinds, can be expressly included in the new constitution as at the establishment of the new State;

(iii) and although the consequence of my advice under both this and the previous head is that the new State constitution could not be formally amended by Commonwealth legislation, it is a novel question, on which no firm conclusion can be drawn, whether guarantees included in the new State constitution, being of a character appropriate for constitutional protection, can be effectively nullified in practice by Commonwealth laws of general application.

30. Whether the constitution of a new State would be in a different position in relation to the discrimination doctrine from the constitutions of the original States. For the most part I have answered this question already under the previous head, the answer being no. There is nothing in the reasoning of the State Banking Case, especially the judgment of Dixon J, to suggest that any distinction be drawn for this purpose between original and new States. If anything, the reasoning implies the contrary because, as I set out at length in my previous advice, the word "State" in s.121 means that there is no such thing as second class Statehood.

31. Other relevant constitutional provisions of doctrines. I am not asked to deal with the entrenchment process itself but I express my agreement with instructing solicitor that there is no reason to doubt that it would be effective for the end in view. Section 128 of the Commonwealth Constitution may be argued to be relevant also on the theory that power to amend State constitutions can be found in it, e.g., by first removing or amending s.106 or, alternatively, on the basis that State constitutions are within, or at all events are now within, the expression "This Constitution" in s.128.

32. I confess that amending a State constitution in reliance on s.128 strikes me as a highly theoretical exercise, unless perhaps as a technique for effectuating an uncontentious co-operative change of some description in constitutional arrangements. It is inconceivable that any attack on a State constitution by way of s.128 would have the smallest prospect of success. Even in the unlikely event that it passed it might well founder on the discrimination doctrine.

33. I have concluded earlier in this advice that both s.106 and the discrimination doctrine protect State constitutions, original or new, from direct amendment by Commonwealth legislation. I agree with instructing solicitor (p.9 of his paper on s.106) that if the view (to which he refers at pp.7-8) that State constitutions are incorporated in the Commonwealth Constitution is correct, the consequence is that s.128 operates as yet a further protection.

34. Timing of new constitution. I have adverted to this matter in paragraph 14 above.

35. Draft Information Paper No. 2. The only statement which I believe needs correction is the sentence in paragraph 10 that the doctrine has been successfully relied upon in several cases. The only clear instance that I can recall is the State Banking Case. With reference to paragraph 4, p.6, in my view ss.107-8 have no application to the present case for the reason given.

36. I so advise.

Dear Professor Howard

Re: Northern Territory Statehood

I am grateful for your advice in this matter dated 29 June 1989.

May I please refer to the implied immunity of States doctrine with which you have dealt.

Do you think that the decision in Queensland Electricity Commission v Queensland (1985) 159 C.L.R. 192 could be regarded as another example of a case where the High Court has applied this doctrine to strike down Commonwealth legislation? I refer to your comment in paragraph 35 of your opinion.

Do you feel that the comments in Re Tracey, Ex.prt Ryan (1989) 63 A.L.J.R. 250 per Mason C.J., Wilson and Dawson JJ. at page 258 (second column) and Brennan and Toohey JJ. at page 269 (first column) and page 271 (second column) (see also Gaudron J. at page 282, second column) justify any additions to the draft information paper? These comments suggest that reliance may be placed on section 106 of the Constitution to strike down Commonwealth laws that interfere with State judicial powers and their exercise, and not just the State judicial institutions themselves. This would seem to reinforce the view that State constitutions, including provisions therein that relate to the exercise of powers by the essential constitutional organs of that State and the protection of civil rights which those organs assure to citizens, are protected by section 106.

I would much appreciate your further comments on these matters.

Yours sincerely

In response to your letter of 3 August 1989, I thank you for recalling to my attention the Queensland Electricity case. It does indeed provide a further instance of the State immunity doctrine and attracted attention at the time for that very reason. My comment in paragraph 35 of the advice is too widely expressed. It should refer to two clear instances, not one.

I am equally obliged for the citations to Re Tracey. They seem to me to justify the insertion on p.9 of the draft information paper of an additional paragraph immediately following paragraph 9 to take account of them. The wording you use in your letter to me seems to me, with respect, entirely apt save that "This would seem to reinforce" could well be strengthened to "This reinforces".

Yours sincerely

A. SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

For the convenience of those considering this report the recommendations are consolidated below:

Recommendation 1:

The Committee recommends that a Constitutional Convention be held in the Northern Territory.

Recommendation 2:

The Committee recommends the enactment of legislation, at the appropriate time, to provide for the establishment of a Convention, to authorise and require it to carry out the task of framing a new constitution for the Northern Territory, that constitution to be adopted at a subsequent Northern Territory referendum, and to enable the Convention to be provided with the necessary powers and resources in order to carry out this task.

Recommendation 3:

The Committee recommends not to have a wholly nominated Convention as it is inconsistent with the principle of representative democracy which principle should form the basis of a new Northern Territory constitution.

Recommendation 4:

The Committee recommends that at least three quarters of the representatives that are on the Convention be elected and that the remainder be nominated.

Recommendation 5:

The Committee recommends that:

1. Northern Territory groups or organisations be represented on the Convention by an appropriate method of nomination, as prescribed in the legislation, such as from the following:

   * Northern Territory Aboriginal Groups (ATSIC Regional Councils in the Northern Territory, Land Councils);
   * Nominees of Northern Territory Local and Community Government, through the Local Government Association of the Northern Territory;
   * Employer Organisations in the Northern Territory;
   * Trade Unions in the Northern Territory;
   * Ethnic Organisations in the Northern Territory;
   * Youth; and
   * Aged.
2. Any failure to nominate should not invalidate the proceedings of the Convention:

Recommendation 6:

The Committee recommends that in addition to the other elected and nominated members, the members of this Sessional Committee as at the time of the nomination date for the Convention be members of the Convention, together with the then Chief Minister and Leader of the Opposition.

Recommendation 7:

The Committee recommends a system of multi-member electorates.

Recommendation 8:

The Committee recommends:

1. a Convention with 10 electorates of 5 representatives to be elected in each; and

2. that an electoral distribution should be carried out within the 20% tolerance rule, and subject thereto, be designed to give some particular emphasis to the interests of non-urban and Aboriginal communities.

Recommendation 9:

The Committee recommends that:

1. persons nominating for election to the Convention be required to have resided in the Northern Territory for a period of six months prior to nomination and otherwise be on the roll for elections to the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly; and

2. voters for nominees to the Convention be required to be on the roll for elections to the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly.

Recommendation 10:

The Committee recommends that:

1. there not be a fixed maximum number of sitting days for the Convention and that the fixing of a final reporting date toward the end of 1997 should be sufficient; and

2. if the Convention then considers it is getting close to resolution but is not yet able to finalise the draft constitution, it should have power to request an extension of time from the Administrator.

Recommendation 11:

The Committee recommends that:

1. the Convention should be charged with preparing and adopting a new Northern Territory constitution;
2. it should be required to meet within the time after the election that is specified in the legislation;

3. the method and procedures whereby the Convention goes about its task should be left to the Convention, provided that the legislation should incorporate an initial set of standing orders to enable it to commence its work, subject to later variation by the Convention;

4. it should be required to meet in public; and

5. a quorum for the Convention should be fixed.

As to sub-recommendation 3 above, Mr Bailey has submitted a dissenting view in that he considers that the voting requirements in respect of issues brought before the Convention should be based on more than just a simple majority and that this requirement should be stipulated in the enabling Act.

Recommendation 12:

The Committee recommends that:

1. the Convention be given the capacity to engage a clerk and other officers plus consultants and advisers, who should not have a right to speak or vote in the Convention; and

2. the Convention should, if it so requires, seek the assistance of the staff of the Sessional Committee and such other persons and resources made available by arrangement with the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly.

Recommendation 13:

The Committee recommends that an adequate appropriation of funds be made to cover the expenses of the Convention, and that the Convention be subject to normal budgetary requirements, administered through the Legislative Assembly.

Recommendation 14:

The Committee recommends that following the adoption of the new Northern Territory constitution that:

1. the Convention be required to report to the Administrator;

2. the report be required to be tabled in the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly and to be published;

3. the Legislative Assembly should then debate that Report, and should have power by resolution to refer any matter back to the Convention for further consideration and report back; and
4. subject thereto, the constitution as adopted should be required to be submitted to a referendum of Northern Territory voters within the time specified in the legislation.

Recommendation 15:

The Committee recommends that there should be provision for the making of regulations as to all matters arising under the enabling Act, including as to the detailed method of nomination and election to the Convention and also as to the holding of the subsequent Northern Territory referendum, including the submission of the draft constitution in discreet parts to that referendum if thought appropriate by the Convention.

B. INTRODUCTION

1. Terms of Reference

(a) On 28 August 1985, the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory of Australia by resolution established the Select Committee on Constitutional Development.

Amendments to the Committee’s original terms of reference were made when it was reconstituted on 28 April 1987. On 30 November 1989, the Legislative Assembly further resolved to amend the terms of reference by changing the Committee’s status to a Sessional Committee. On 4 December 1990 and on 27 June 1994, it was against reconstituted with no further change to its terms of reference — see Appendix 1.

(b) The original resolutions were passed in conjunction with proposals then being developed in the Northern Territory for a grant of Statehood to the Northern Territory within the Australian federal system. The terms of reference include, as a major aspect of the work of the Committee, a consideration of matters connected with a new State constitution.

2. Purpose of this Interim Report

(a) The Committee is aware that the Chief Minister for the Northern Territory has publicly announced the target date for a grant of Statehood for the Northern Territory of 1 January 2001, the Centenary of Federation. Without necessarily endorsing this target date, the Committee has resolved upon a strategy and timetable for actioning its terms of reference which would facilitate the achievement of that target date, including as to the formulation and adoption of a new constitution for the Northern Territory.

(b) Given the proposals for the establishment of a Territory Constitutional Convention as part of this strategy, and the need for legislation to be drafted at an appropriate time to set up that Constitutional Convention, the Committee has resolved to prepare this Interim Report with its recommendations as to how that Constitutional Convention should be established. This should facilitate the preparation and passage of the necessary legislation.

(c) Before proceeding to a discussion of its specific recommendations, the Committee first considers some background issues as to the use of conventions in Australia and the USA.
3. Discussion and Information Papers

(a) The Committee has prepared and issued a number of Discussion and Information Papers arising from these terms of reference. These included the Discussion Paper on Representation in a Territory Constitutional Convention\(^\text{136}\), for ease of reference called the "Discussion Paper" — a copy of which is set out in Appendix 2 of this Interim Report.

(b) That Discussion Paper made it clear that both the Northern Territory Government and this Sessional Committee (then a Select Committee) advocated the holding of a Northern Territory Constitutional Convention to frame a new "home-grown" constitution for the Northern Territory after the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory had received and dealt with the final report of this Committee. Reference should also be made to the Committee's Information Paper No. 1, Options for a Grant of Statehood\(^\text{137}\) in this regard. The view that there should be a Territory Constitutional Convention has since been maintained by the Sessional Committee. The new Territory constitution as adopted by that Constitutional Convention would then be submitted to a referendum of Northern Territory electors for approval, and if so approved, would be submitted to the Commonwealth as part of proposals for further Territory constitutional development, perhaps as a new State.

4. Submissions on the Discussion Paper

(a) The list of persons and organisations that commented on the Committee's Discussion Paper is set out in Appendix 3 of this Interim Report.

(b) None of these commentators were opposed to the concept of a Territory Constitutional Convention. Rather, the concept seems to be one that is capable of attracting wide community support and of creating a feeling that this is an opportunity for a wide cross section of that community to participate in the process of Northern Territory constitution making.

(c) Several of the commentators referred to the need for some broad based system for determining membership on the Convention that reflected the different peoples and groups resident in the Northern Territory. Beyond that, the commentators concentrated on the issues of the method of selection of members of the Convention, qualifications of members, representation of particular groups on the Convention, the use of specialists and consultants and procedural matters.

(d) The Committee in its Discussion Paper suggested that there were three basic ways to constitute the Convention membership -

(i) Wholly elected,

(ii) Wholly nominated; and

\(^{137}\) Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Select Committee on Constitutional Development, 1987, Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory, Darwin: p.6.
(iii) Partly elected/partly nominated.

The Discussion Paper discussed the advantages and disadvantages of each of these options.

(e) Most of the commentators discussed these options, and most of them favoured a system of mixed elected/appointed members. A few of them suggested a specified breakup between the two, varying from equal numbers, to a 75%/25% division or a 2/3rds/1/3rd division, both favouring elected members. Only a few commentators favoured a wholly elected Convention or a wholly nominated Convention. There was also some strong comments against a wholly nominated Convention.

(f) Consistent with the view that the Convention should reflect a broad spectrum of Northern Territory views, a number of commentators made suggestions directed at achieving this. Thus the desirability for the representation of rural interests and remote communities, of Aboriginal peoples, of business interests, trade unions, local and community government, political parties, ethnic groups and professional groups (among others) were all mentioned, some of them by several commentators. Most commentators appeared to favour a limitation of representation to Territorians only, although a few expressly mentioned the possibility of interstate or even international representation as advisers or specialists. The possibility of a system of election by a system of proportional representation was referred to in passing, as was a system of single or multiple member electorates. Some commentators favoured restrictions on the participation of politicians, constitutional lawyers, academics and public servants, with the possibility of some of these being non-voting consultants. The desirability of equal male/female representation was also advocated.

(g) Procedurally, some commentators stressed the need for the Convention to be adequately resourced, the need for it to be open to the public, the capacity for the Convention to determine its own procedures and to seek expert advice, the desirability of having prior public meetings in major centres, and the suggestion that the draft constitution emanating from the Convention be referred back to the Legislative Assembly for comments before going to a Northern Territory referendum.

(h) The Committee is grateful for all of these expressions of views and has taken them into account in preparing this Interim Report.

C. BACKGROUND

1. Constitutional Conventions in Australia

(a) It is useful to describe the past use of conventions in this country in the framing or reviewing of constitutions. This is a matter that was briefly referred to in the Committee's Discussion Paper, but it may assist in the implementation of the Committee's recommendations if this was done in somewhat more detail in this Report.

(b) The constitutions of the Australian self-governing colonies (later the original States) were framed by the legislatures of each colony under Imperial Legislation. The method of constitutional conventions was not used.

Interim Report No. 1 — February 1995
A Northern Territory Constitutional Convention

5-6
(c) In the case of the mechanisms used in the lead up to federation in 1901, the position is a little more complicated. There had been an Inter-colonial Convention in Sydney in 1883, which lead to the passage of the Imperial Federal Council of Australasia Act of 1885 establishing the Federal Council. However, this scheme was a failure. Then following the Australasian Federation Conference in Melbourne of 1890, composed entirely of official Parliamentary delegates from the colonies. It was this Conference that resolved to call together a full-scale Convention, empowered by the various Colonial Legislatures "to consider and report upon an adequate scheme for a Federal Constitution". It further resolved that the Convention should consist of not more than 7 members from each of the self-governing colonies and not more than 4 members from each of the Crown colonies.

(d) The National Australasian Convention began in Sydney in 1891, comprised entirely of delegates appointed pursuant to resolutions of the respective colonial legislatures, including New Zealand. It was at this Convention that drafting of a new federal constitution first began in earnest.

(e) After 1891, there was then a delay of a few years before the matter was reactivated with a view to holding another Federal Convention on an elected basis. Eventually, empowering legislation was enacted in most of the Australian colonies for the election of delegates to the next Convention, with the task of framing a federal Constitution under the Crown in the form of a Bill for enactment by the Imperial Parliament. A copy of the New South Wales Australasian Federation Enabling Act, 1895, is set out in Appendix 4 of this Interim Report. The South Australian Australasian Federation Enabling Act (South Australia), 1895, No. 632, extending expressly to the Northern Territory, was in very similar terms.

(f) Under these enabling Acts, elections were to be held for 10 representatives of each colony by qualified electors in that colony, with each colony as one electoral district. The principle of equality of representation was a feature. Any person elected or eligible for election to either colonial house of Parliament was eligible for election to this Convention. The enabling Acts further provided that the drafts of the constitution were to be submitted to the colonial legislatures for comment between Convention sittings. The final draft was to be submitted to a referendum of colonial voters on a simple 'yes' - 'no' basis before transmission to the Queen for enactment by the Imperial Parliament. The result of the elections (or selection by Parliament in WA) in the 5 Colonies that first participated was that most of the delegates were colonial parliamentarians, but a few were not. The Convention first met in Adelaide in 1897.

(h) The Adelaide Convention then appointed 3 select Committees dealing with constitutional machinery, finance and the judiciary. The delegates reassembled for the second session of the Convention in Sydney, together with the newly elected delegates from Western Australia. It then adjourned to its third session in Melbourne in 1898, which brought it to an end. From this emerged a draft constitution, which, subject to some last minute changes, was eventually accepted by the Australian voters and enacted into law by the Imperial Parliament in the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900, effective from 1 January 1901.

(i) Since then, there has been a Royal Commission on the Australian Constitution (1929) and a Joint Committee of the Commonwealth Parliament on Constitutional Review (1959). In more recent times, the various Australian Parliaments resolved to join together in a Convention to review the Australian Constitution. The Convention of nominated delegates, including from the Northern Territory, first met in Sydney in 1973. It was later extended to include local government delegates. It continued to meet on various occasions up until 1985, by which time it had lost the support of the Federal Government.

(j) In 1985, the Commonwealth Attorney-General announced the establishment of an appointed Constitutional Commission to review the Australian Constitution. It was assisted by 5 Advisory Committees. Its final Report was delivered in 1988. A few of its recommendations for change were then put to a national referendum in conjunction with some other proposals but all failed.

(k) The conclusion to be reached is that while the mechanism of constitutional conventions has been used at a federal level, it has not been employed at a State level in Australia. But this does not lead the Committee to conclude that it is an inappropriate method at a State (or Territory) level.

2. Constitutional Conventions in the USA

(a) The use of elected constitutional conventions for both constitution-making and also for constitutional revision has been a feature of the USA system at all levels. This is no doubt associated with the concept that political authority in that country is derived from the people.

(b) The first wave of USA State constitutions, including those in the first year after independence, were drafted quickly, usually by the State legislatures. However, Pennsylvania's 1776 constitution was drafted by a separate convention elected for the purpose. The second wave of State constitutions were adopted in a more deliberate fashion, often using specifically elected conventions. Thus, for example, the convention that drafted the New York Constitution in 1777 took a period of 8 months. In Massachusetts, the process of constitution-making stretched from 1776 to 1780, leading to the unsuccessful legislatively proposed constitution of 1778 and ultimately the famous Massachusetts Constitution of 1780, the oldest USA constitution still in effect.

(c) In 1787, a convention of States was held which resulted in the adoption of the current USA Constitution and its subsequent ratification by the States. That Constitution itself incorporates a mechanism for further conventions for the purposes of constitutional amendment, subject to ratification by three fourths of the States (Article V).

(d) The most recent States to be admitted to the USA federation, Alaska (1959) and Hawaii (1959) both used the mechanism of elected constitutional conventions to draft their new State constitutions. A copy of the Alaska Constitutional Convention Enabling Act of 1955 is at Appendix 5 of this Interim Report. It provided for an elected Convention of 55 delegates, based on election districts with variable numbers, the elections to be conducted without any reference to political party affiliations. The Convention was limited to a maximum of 75 meeting days (with provision for adjournments). Its resultant constitution was required to be submitted to Territory electors for ratification and upon ratification was then submitted through the President to the Congress for its approval by an Enabling Congressional Act.

(e) Commonly, USA State constitutions provide for constitutional conventions to be held for the purposes of constitutional revision, as well as other methods of revision. An example is in Article XVII of the Hawaii Constitution, a copy of which is set out in Appendix 6 of this Interim Report. Several such conventions have been held in Hawaii. In 1986, a provision for mandatory periodic conventions was rejected by the voters in Hawaii. Up to 1987, more than 230 State constitutional conventions had been convened.

(f) The mechanism of a constitutional convention has also been used in USA territories. Thus the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico was adopted by an elected convention in 1951 and was brought into operation. In 1982, voters in the District of Columbia approved an initiative to call a constitutional convention to turn the District into a new State and to adopt a new constitution. The constitution was adopted by the convention and ratified by District voters but has not been implemented by Congress.

D. A NORTHERN TERRITORY CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

I. Establishment of a Convention

(a) Given the view already expressed by the Committee elsewhere that the Northern Territory should adopt its own, "home grown" constitution, the Committee adheres to the view that a Territory Constitutional Convention is the most appropriate method to frame a constitution for the Northern Territory as the Northern Territory moves towards a grant of Statehood. It provides an excellent means by which a wide cross-section of the Northern Territory community can participate in framing their own fundamental rules as to how the Northern Territory and its government is to operate. Such a Convention would be assisted by the recommendations and publications of this Committee and by the subsequent deliberations of the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly on the Report of this Committee. The Convention's draft constitution would in turn be submitted to Northern Territory electors at a referendum before being presented to the Commonwealth for implementation by the national Parliament as part of further Northern Territory constitutional development. By this democratic method, it could fairly be said that it would be a "home-grown" constitution that reflected the needs and aspirations of Territorians generally.

</tr>
</tbody>

(b) Such a Convention will have to be established by legislation in order to carry out its task of framing the new constitution and to enable that constitution to be put to a Territory referendum.

(c) There is a question whether it is within the legislative capacity of the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly to enact this legislation under the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978. The Committee believes that it is within that Assembly's legislative capacity to do so, although the Northern Territory Government may wish to consider this matter further. In this regard, the plenary grant of legislative power in section 6 of that Act is very broad. The legislation would merely enable the machinery of the Convention to be established and for it to carry out its task, but would not give
The Committee recognises that only the national Parliament can legally implement that constitution.

Recommendation: 2
The Committee recommends the enactment of legislation, at the appropriate time, to provide for the establishment of a Convention, to authorise and require it to carry out the task of framing a new constitution for the Northern Territory, that constitution to be adopted at a subsequent Northern Territory referendum, and to enable the Convention to be provided with the necessary powers and resources in order to carry out this task.

2. Composition of the Convention

(a) Having reviewed the comments on the Committee’s previous Discussion Paper and having considered the matter generally, the Committee considers that it would not be appropriate to have a wholly nominated Convention. While the method of nomination may be a method of ensuring that specified interest groups in the community are involved, it would have the fatal flaw that it could not be said to be democratic in any sense. It is very likely that it would also meet with objections from those interest groups which failed to be nominated or which considered they were under-represented. It may also meet with objections from the Commonwealth Government, which must implement any proposals for further Northern Territory constitutional development.

Recommendation: 3
The Committee recommends not to have a wholly nominated Convention, as it is inconsistent with the principle of representative democracy, which principle should form the basis of the new Northern Territory constitution.

(b) On the other hand, the Committee sees considerable advantages in the capacity to nominate representatives of key Northern Territory groups onto the Convention in conjunction with elected representatives. Such a mechanism was favoured by a majority of commentators. It ensures that those key groups having a vital interest in the future of the Northern Territory are not overlooked in the framing and adoption of the new constitution. The Committee identifies below some of the key Northern Territory groups which it considers should be so represented.

(c) The Committee sees it as important and that it is consistent with the democratic principle to have a majority of elected representatives on the Convention. Several ratios were suggested by the commentators favouring a mixture of elected and nominated delegates, from equal numbers, to a two-thirds/one-third ratio and a three-quarters/one-quarter ratio.

Recommendation: 4
The Committee recommends that at least three-quarters of the representatives that are on the Convention be elected and that the remainder be nominated.
(d) The key Territory interest groups or organisations that could nominate representatives on the Convention may include the following:

* Northern Territory Aboriginal Groups (ATSIC Regional Councils in the Northern Territory, Land Councils).
* Nominees of Northern Territory Local and Community Government, through the Local Government Association of the Northern Territory.
* Employer Organisations in the Northern Territory.
* Trade Unions in the Northern Territory.
* Ethnic Organisations in the Northern Territory.
* Youth.
* Aged.

There may be other Northern Territory groups or organisations which consider that they should have automatic representation, but they should be required to first put up a compelling argument for nomination without election.

Recommendation: 5

The Committee recommends that

1. Northern Territory groups or organisations be represented on the Convention by an appropriate method of nomination, as prescribed in the legislation, such as from the following:

   * Northern Territory Aboriginal Groups (ATSIC Regional Councils in the Northern Territory, Land Councils);
   * Nominees of Northern Territory Local and Community Government, through the Local Government Association of the Northern Territory;
   * Employer Organisations in the Northern Territory;
   * Trade Unions in the Northern Territory;
   * Ethnic Organisations in the Northern Territory;
   * Youth; and
   * Aged.

2. any failure to nominate should not invalidate the proceedings of the Convention.

(e) There is also the question of the extent of the involvement in the Convention of members of the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly. One possibility is that those individual members should be able to stand for election to the Convention. There is also the question whether any of those members should be members of the Convention - for example, the Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. Further, there is a good argument that the six members of the Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development, being a bipartisan Committee of members, made up of equal numbers of Government and Opposition members, should be members of the Convention. This Committee has been closely involved with the preparation of the draft Constitution.

(f) There is a counter argument that politicians should not be permitted to stand for election or to be nominated to the Convention. Alternatively there is an argument that if they can stand, they should not be able to do so on the basis of their party affiliations. The Committee has considered whether these are realistic limitations in a small jurisdiction like the Northern Territory, where the affiliations of politically active individuals are usually well known. The Committee considers that there should not be any exclusions of specific categories of persons from nomination.

Recommendation: 6

The Committee recommends that in addition to the other elected and nominated members, the members of this Sessional Committee together with the then Chief Minister and Leader of the Opposition, as at the time of the nomination date for the Convention, be members of the Convention.

(g) As to the method of election of representatives, the Committee is aware of the need to ensure that urban, non-urban and Aboriginal communities are adequately represented. On the other hand, the Committee sees it as important to maintain the democratic principle and not to depart too far from the principle of one vote, one value. The present tolerance of 20% in the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978 seems reasonable for this purpose.

(h) The possibility for electoral mechanisms for the Convention vary from treating the whole of the Northern Territory as one electorate and using a system of proportional representation, to the use of multi-member or single member electorates.

(i) The Committee considers that the method of one electorate for the whole of the Northern Territory is too unwieldy and would result in a very long ballot paper and confusion amongst voters. A system of single member electorates would, if a sufficient number of representatives was to be chosen, result in very small electorates, smaller than those of present Northern Territory Legislative Assembly electorates. It may also tend to result in a less representative cross-section of the community on the Convention. Accordingly the Committee feels that a system of multi-member electorates, of, say, 5 representatives per electorate would be appropriate. This should ensure that ballot papers are of a manageable size, while at the same time facilitating a more representative selection from the community.

Recommendation: 7

The Committee recommends a system of multi-member electorates.

(j) As to the size of the total membership of the Convention, the Committee considers that the acceptable range is between 50 and 100 representatives. If existing Northern Territory Legislative Assembly electorates were to be used, this would result in 25 electorates of 5 representatives each, a total of 125 elected representatives. These, plus the nominated representatives on a three quarters/one quarter ratio, the members of the Sessional Committee including the then Chief Minister and Leader of the Opposition, would result in approximately a 174 member Convention. However, a smaller Convention could be based on a lesser number of electorates. For example, it would be possible to have 10 electorates of five representatives each, electing a total of 50 representatives, plus, say, 16 nominated representatives, the members of the Sessional Committee, including the then Chief Minister and Leader of the Opposition, making approximately a 74 member Convention. This total is more than the number of delegates used for the Convention for the original USA Constitution and the Alaskan Constitution, but is still a manageable size.

(k) On balance, the Committee favours a Convention with 10 electorates of five representatives to be elected in each. This would result in a Convention that would not be so large that it would be excessively difficult to manage, and not too small so as to be unrepresentative of a broad cross section of the Northern Territory community. It would also be less expensive to run than a much larger Convention. Furthermore, the Committee favours that an electoral distribution should be carried out for the Convention within the 20% tolerance rule, and subject thereto, be designed to give some particular emphasis to the interests of non-urban and Aboriginal communities.

Recommendation: 8

The Committee recommends:

1. a Convention with 10 electorates of 5 representatives to be elected in each; and
2. that an electoral distribution should be carried out within the 20% tolerance rule, and subject thereto, be designed to give some particular emphasis to the interests of non-urban and Aboriginal communities.

(l) The Committee supports the view that women should be encouraged to equally participate in the Convention but does not make any recommendations designed to prescribe such equal participation in any way.

(m) There is a question whether both the persons nominating to the Convention and voters should also be required to have resided in the Northern Territory for a reasonably long period, in order to eliminate persons with no permanent interest in the Northern Territory. The Committee refers by way of comparison to its tentative recommendations in its Discussion Paper on A Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory\(^{138}\) of a 6 month residential requirement in the Northern Territory for persons nominating to the Northern Territory Parliament. The Committee feels that this is also a sufficient period of residence for nominees to the Convention, having regard to democratic principles.

\(^{138}\) Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Select Committee on Constitutional Development, 1987, Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory, Darwin: p.20.
Recommendation: 9

The Committee recommends that:

1. persons nominating for election to the Convention be required to have resided in the Northern Territory for a period of 6 months prior to nomination and otherwise be on the roll for elections to the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly; and

2. voters for persons nominating for election to the Convention be required to be on the roll for elections to the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly.

3. Procedural Issues

(a) The Committee, in developing its strategies designed to meet the target date of 2001, has adopted a possible timetable for a Convention to be held between mid 1996 and late 1997. This would mean that the Convention elections would have to be held in the first part of 1996. The Convention would meet from time to time during the following period as it determined, with power to adjourn from time to time.

(b) In the Alaska Constitutional Convention Enabling Act, the Convention was limited to not more than 75 meeting days, but with power to adjourn for periods not exceeding 15 days at a time for the purpose of holding public meetings. This limitation was designed to ensure that the Convention concentrated on bringing its task to an end within a reasonable time by the adoption of a constitution.

(c) The Committee sees some advantage in prescribing the maximum number of meeting days and a time limit within which the Convention must report with a new constitution. On the other hand, the Committee is aware of the complexities of the Convention's task, particularly in seeking a constitutional settlement acceptable to both Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal people in the Northern Territory, and does not want to be too prescriptive in limiting the Convention time-wise.

Recommendation: 10

The Committee recommends that:

1. there not be a fixed maximum number of sitting days for the Convention, and that the fixing of a final reporting date toward the end of 1997 should be sufficient; and

2. if the Convention then considers it is getting close to resolution but is not yet able to finalise the draft constitution, it should have power to request an extension of time from the Administrator.

(d) At the same time, the Committee feels that the legislation should specify a date within which the Convention should commence work on the preparation of the new constitution and that the Convention should be provided with some initial standing orders. Thereafter, the Convention should be free to determine its own procedures, providing it meets in public and has a quorum.
(e) Mr Bailey has a dissenting view as to the specification of the voting majority required for the Convention. He considers that the voting requirements in respect of issues brought before the Convention should be based on more than just a simple majority and that this requirement should be stipulated in the enabling Act.

Recommendation: 11

The Committee recommends that:

1. the Convention should be charged with preparing and adopting a new Northern Territory constitution;
2. it should be required to meet within the time after the election that is specified in the legislation;
3. the method and procedures whereby the Convention goes about its task should be left to the Convention, provided that the legislation should incorporate an initial set of standing orders to enable it to commence its work, subject to later variation by the Convention;
4. it should be required to meet in public; and
5. a quorum for the Convention should be fixed.

As to sub-recommendation 3 above, Mr Bailey has submitted a dissenting view in that he considers that the voting requirements in respect of issues brought before the Convention should be based on more than just a simple majority and that this requirement should be stipulated in the enabling Act.

(f) The Convention will need to have the capacity to obtain administrative assistance and expert advice. In part, this could be provided through the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly, including the staff of the Sessional Committee. The expert advice could be obtained locally or elsewhere.

Recommendation: 12

The Committee recommends that:

1. the Convention be given the capacity to engage a clerk and other officers plus consultants and advisers, who should not have a right to speak or vote in the Convention; and
2. the Convention should, if it so requires, seek the assistance of the staff of the Sessional Committee and such other persons and resources made available by arrangement with the Speaker of the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly.

(g) The Convention will require adequate funding within normal budgetary controls applicable to the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly.
Recommendation: 13
The Committee recommends that an adequate appropriation of funds be made to cover the expenses of the Convention, and that the Convention be subject to normal budgetary requirements, administered through the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly.

The legislation will need to prescribe the procedures following the completion of the new constitution by the Convention. These procedures should include the tabling and publication of the Convention's report and debate in the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly on that report, with a possibility of a reference back to the Convention. It should also include the ultimate submission of the new constitution to a Territory referendum within a limited time.

Recommendation: 14
The Committee recommends that following adoption of the new Northern Territory constitution that:

1. the Convention be required to report to the Administrator;
2. the report be required to be tabled in the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly and to be published;
3. the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly should then debate that Report, and should have power by resolution to refer any matter back to the Convention for further consideration and report back; and
4. subject thereto, the constitution as adopted should be required to be submitted to a referendum of Northern Territory voters within the time specified in the legislation.

(j) There will be a number of other matters necessary to implement the legislation, including details of electoral mechanisms and procedures. The Committee suggests that these be left to regulations under the legislation.

Recommendation: 15
The Committee recommends that there should be provision for the making of regulations as to all matters arising under the enabling Act, including as to the detailed method of nomination and election to the Convention and also as to the holding of the subsequent Northern Territory referendum, including the submission of the draft constitution in discreet parts to that referendum if thought appropriate by the Convention.
APPENDIX 1

TERMS OF REFERENCE

(AS CONTAINED IN THE RESOLUTION OF THE NORTHERN TERRITORY LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY)

JUNE 1994
TERMS OF REFERENCE

(AS CONTAINED IN THE RESOLUTION OF
THE NORTHERN TERRITORY LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY
27 JUNE 1994)

THAT, WHEREAS this Assembly is of the opinion that when the Northern Territory of Australia becomes a new State it should do so as a member of the Federation in terms resulting in equality with the other States with its people having the same constitutional rights, privileges, entitlements and responsibilities as the people of the existing States;

AND WHEREAS insofar as it is constitutionally possible the equality should apply as on the date of the grant of statehood to the new State;

AND WHEREAS it is necessary to draft a new State constitution;

(1) during the present session of this Assembly - a committee to be known as the Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development, be established to inquire into, report and make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on:

(a) a constitution for the new State and the principles upon which it should be drawn, including:

(i) legislative powers;
(ii) executive powers;
(iii) judicial powers; and
(iv) the method to be adopted to have a draft new State constitution approved by or on behalf of the people of the Northern Territory;

(b) the issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the Federation as a new State;

(c) such other constitutional and legal matters as may be referred to it by:

(i) relevant ministers, or
(ii) resolution of the Assembly.

(2) the Committee undertake a role in promoting the awareness of constitutional issues to the Northern Territory and Australian populations;

(3) unless otherwise ordered, the Committee consist of Mr Bailey, Mr Baldwin, Mr Hatton, Mrs Hickey, Mr Mitchell and Mr Rioli;

(4) the Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, although not Members of the Committee, may attend all meetings of the Committee; may question witnesses; and may participate in the deliberations of the Committee, but shall not vote;
the Chairman of the Committee may, from time to time, appoint a Member of the Committee to be the Deputy Chairman of the Committee and that the Member so appointed shall act as Chairman of the Committee at any time when there is no Chairman or when the Chairman is not present at a meeting of the Committee; in the event of an equality of voting, the Chairman, or the Deputy Chairman when acting as Chairman, shall have a casting vote;

the Committee have power to appoint subcommittees and to refer to any such subcommittee any matter which the Committee is empowered to examine;

four Members of the Committee constitute a quorum of the Committee and two members of a subcommittee constitute a quorum of the subcommittee;

the Committee or any subcommittee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to adjourn from place to place, to meet and transact business in public or private session and to sit during any adjournment of the Assembly;

the Committee shall be empowered to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by it and, unless otherwise ordered by the Committee, a daily Hansard shall be published of such proceedings of the Committee as take place in public;

the Committee have leave to report from time to time and any Member of the Committee have power to add a protest or dissent to any report;

the Committee report to the Assembly as soon as possible after 30 June each year on its activities during the preceding financial year;

unless otherwise ordered by the Committee, all documents received by the Committee during its inquiry shall remain in the custody of the Assembly provided that, on the application of a department or person, any document, if not likely to be further required, may, in the Speaker's discretion, be returned to the department or person from whom it was obtained;

members of the public and representatives of the news media may attend and report any public session of the Committee, unless otherwise ordered by the Committee;

the Committee may authorise the televising of public hearings of the Committee under such rules as the Speaker considers appropriate;

the Committee shall be provided with all necessary staff, facilities and resources and shall be empowered, with the approval of the Speaker, to appoint persons with specialist knowledge for the purposes of the Committee;

nothing in these Terms of Reference or in the Standing Orders shall be taken to limit or control the duties, powers or functions of any Minister of the Territory who is also a Member of the Sessional Committee;
(18) the Committee be empowered to consider the minutes of proceedings, evidence taken and records of similar committees established in the previous Assembly; and

(19) the foregoing provisions of this Resolution, so far as they are inconsistent with Standing Orders, have effect notwithstanding anything contained in the Standing Orders.
APPENDIX 2

DISCUSSION PAPER ON REPRESENTATION IN A TERRITORY CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

OCTOBER 1987
A. BACKGROUND

1. In the Chief Minister's policy statement, Towards Statehood, (28 August 1986), a three-stage process was proposed for the making of the new State constitution. The three stages were:

   (i) The preparation of a draft constitution by the Select Committee on Constitutional Development;

   (ii) The development and adoption of a proposed constitution by a Northern Territory Constitutional Convention for submission to a referendum; and

   (iii) A referendum of Northern Territory electors to approve the constitution as ratified by the Convention.

   The Chief Minister stressed the condition that the Convention must represent "a broad cross-section of community interests and opinions".

2. The Select Committee on Constitutional Development has also considered the constitution-making process and, in November 1986, endorsed the Chief Minister's proposal. It also undertook "to prepare for inclusion in its report to the Legislative Assembly [before June 1988] recommendations on representation at the proposed Constitutional Convention. To that end, discussion has taken place within the Committee but except for a decision that the preferred Convention size should be between fifty and sixty, the Committee has not yet determined its attitude to representation. Before any recommendation is made, the Committee wishes to receive public comment on the issue. This paper addresses the salient questions to be resolved.

B. REPRESENTATION

1. There are three basic ways to constitute the Convention membership. They are:

   (i) Wholly-elected;

   (ii) Wholly-nominated; and

   (iii) Partly elected/partly nominated.
To the extent that it is elected, the question arises as to the electoral and voting systems which will be most appropriate. To the extent that it is nominated, salient questions are how the nomination process should be conducted and who should do the nominating.

2. (i) Wholly-elected conventions are the rule in the U.S.A. constitutional experience. Because of the electoral system devised (a combination of at-large and precinct contests) and the deliberate avoidance of overt partisanship, the outcome usually produced an adequate representational profile and thus a broad political legitimacy and community acceptance. As opposed to the 1891 Convention which was wholly nominated by the respective colonial parliaments, the Australian Constitutional Convention (which substantially drafted the federal constitution) was also directly elected.

(ii) Advantages:

   a) Most "democratic" option;
   b) Confers political legitimacy and acceptability;
   c) May be required by Commonwealth government; and
   d) Depending on electoral system used, a fair representation could be achieved.

(iii) Disadvantages:

   a) Costly and time-consuming;
   b) If turnout low, representation may not be adequate;
   c) If electoral system ill-chosen, representation again may be deficient; and
   d) Suitable candidates may not offer for election.

3. The electoral system and voting procedure used will have to be chosen with the view of providing "a broad cross-section of community interests and opinion". It is unlikely that single-member constituencies would achieve that result as minority interests do not fare well under such circumstances. They would certainly do better at an "at-large" election using the Territory as one electorate (as with Senate elections) but it would probably, given the weight of "urban" voters and Darwin voters in particular, not produce a reasonable regional balance. Thus, the most appropriate system would be a series of multi-member electorates (of varying sizes) covering regional areas. Assuming a Convention of fifty-five members, Greater Darwin would return twenty-two members, Alice Springs eleven, Katherine four, Tennant Creek and Nhulunbuy two each, northern "rural" and southern "rural" seven each. A single transferable voting procedure [i.e. the full Senate variant] would enable a wide range of community opinion to be represented.

4. (i) A wholly-nominated convention also presents a number of advantages and disadvantages.

(ii) Advantages:

   a) Less costly to convene than a fully-elected convention;
b) Allows for a deliberate choice of candidates thereby ensuring reasonable representation;
c) May ensure participation of best-suited and qualified representatives; and
d) Could allow involvement of "non-Territorians".

(iii) Disadvantages

a) Lacks the same legitimacy as a fully-elected Convention;
b) May be unacceptable to Commonwealth Government;
c) Likely to be criticised as "rigged" or unintentionally unrepresentative;
d) Difficulty of ensuring places and balance for the myriad of Territory interests; and
e) members may see themselves as "delegates" rather than "trustees" and represent their "sponsors" rather than the wider Territory concerns. In that circumstance, agreement on sensitive issues may be hard to reach and the resultant constitution could follow "the lowest common denominator" approach which may prejudice its acceptance at a referendum.

(iv) The Select Committee believes that, if the Convention is to be nominated, the final choice of nominees should be made by the Legislative Assembly on advice from the Select Committee. Nominations could be sought from designated groups or specific individuals. Public advertisement could also be employed to elicit nominations from the general community. It is important that all significant bodies of opinion (whether organised or not) obtain some degree of representation. To enable the Select Committee to identify all parties deserving or desirous of representation (and the extent of that representation) on the Convention, it seeks expressions of interest from such parties. Comment is also welcomed on the desirability and practicability of having non-Territorians or Territory parliamentarians as members. So too is the proportion of "specialists" (those nominated for their particular expertise, qualifications and experience) to "generalists" (those who have some broad appreciation of constitutional subjects).

(v) The type of membership should relate to the form in which the Convention operates. If it undertakes most of its business in plenary session, the membership appropriate—or such a style will be different from that of a Convention which conducts most of its business in specialist committees. A paper prepared by a Select Committee member is based around "specialist" membership. He proposed a structure of four committees to deal with legislative, executive, judicial and "other matters" aspects respectively. The Convention Chairman and the Committee Convenors are to be selected on the grounds of national eminence, capacity and acceptability. Committee membership which is to include two M.L.As, is to be chosen for its particular qualifications and a minority could come from outside the Territory. Any scheme which gives prominence to a strong committee structure will tend to require similar "specialist" members. Public comment on the form which the Convention should take is also sought. Particular attention should be given to the roles of committees and plenary sessions.
5. The third approach - the mixed model - offers a range of membership possibilities. At one extreme, there could be a predominance of elected members, at the other a predominance of nominated. As a hybrid model, the mixed option has a combination of the advantages and disadvantages pertinent to the wholly-elected and wholly-nominated models. But, it does have the additional benefit, if the majority of members are elected, of allowing participation of key groups (such as the Legislative Assembly, land councils, local and community government organisations, or any other major body of opinion demonstratively excluded in the electoral process). In that way, nomination of a certain proportion of the Convention can ensure an adequate representation of Territory interests.

AUSTRALIAN FEDERATION

ENABLING ACT, 1895 (NSW) NUMBER XXIV
AUSTRALIAN FEDERATION ENABLING ACT, 1895 (NSW)
NUMBER XXIV

Preamble
An Act to enable New South Wales take part in the framing, acceptance, and enactment of a Federal Constitution for Australia [23rd December, 1895.]

WHEREAS it is proposed that Legislative provision shall be made by the Colonies for the framing, acceptance, and enactment of a Federal Constitution for Australasia: And whereas it is desirable that New South Wales should be represented at the Convention, which it is proposed shall frame the said Constitution: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly of New South Wales in Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. This Act may be cited as the "Australasian Federation Enabling Act, 1895."

2. In this Act the following terms bear the meanings set opposite to them respectively -

"Colonies" — The Colonies of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia, and the Province of South Australia, including the Northern Territory.

"Constitution" — The Federal Constitution framed or accepted pursuant to this Act.

"Convention" — The Convention provided for by this Act.

"Governor" — The Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council.

"Prescribed "-- Prescribed by Regulation made under this Act.

"Proclamation" — Proclamation by the Governor published in the Gazette.

"Representatives of New South Wales" — The Representatives of New South Wales in the Convention.

3. The chief objects of this Act are to provide as follows:

(I) For the representation of New South Wales at a Convention consisting of the Representative of each Colony represented, charged with the duty of framing a Federal Constitution for Australasia.
(II) For submitting the Constitution so framed to the electors for the Legislative Assembly for acceptance or rejection by direct vote.

(III) For transmitting the Constitution for enactment by the Imperial Parliament

Commencement

4. This Act shall come into operation on a day to be fixed by proclamation, when two Colonies, in addition to New South Wales, have adopted legislation providing, in respect of those Colonies, for the election of the representatives of those Colonies at the Convention.

5. This Act is divided into four Parts, as follows:-

PART I.—The Convention

PART II — The submission to the Electors.

PART III — The transmission for Legislative Enactment.

PART IV — Supplemental

PART I

The Convention

6. The Convention shall consist of ten Representatives of each Colony represented.

7. The Convention shall be charged with the duty of framing for Australasia a Federal Constitution under the Crown in the form of a Bill for enactment by the Imperial Parliament.

8. Every Member and every person eligible for membership of either House of Parliament shall be eligible for membership of the Convention as a Representative of New South Wales. And any one hundred or more electors duly qualified to vote for election of a Member of the Legislative Assembly shall be entitled in the prescribed manner to nominate any eligible person, whose consent in writing shall accompany such nomination for such membership, and after such nomination has closed, the list persons so nominated, with their residence and occupation, be advertised in the alphabetical order of their surnames at least three times in every newspaper published in the Colony.

9. The seat of a Representative of New South Wales shall be vacated—

(I) By resignation under his hand addressed to the Governor.
(II) By absence, without the leave of the Convention, from any five sittings thereof.

(III) By any other circumstance, except absence from the Assembly, which in the case of a Member of the Legislative Assembly would vacate his seat in the Assembly.

10. The first vacancy occurring pursuant to the preceding section shall forthwith be filled by the appointment by the Governor of the candidate who, not being, nor having been, a Member of the Convention was highest on the Poll. Every subsequent appointment to be made in like manner.

11. Every person being the holder of an Elector’s Right shall be qualified and entitled to vote for the election of Representatives of New South Wales.

12. The first election of Representatives of New South Wales shall take place on a day to be fixed by Proclamation, which day, as nearly may be conveniently practicable, shall be the same as the day of first election of Representatives of other Colonies.

13. The voting shall be taken throughout New South Wales as one Electoral District, and every voter shall vote for the full number of Representatives required, otherwise the vote shall be rejected as informal.

14. No person shall vote more than once at the election of Representatives of New South Wales.

15. If any question arises respecting the validity of an election or return the same shall be heard and determined by a Committee appointed by the Convention as prescribed. And Part V of the Parliamentary Electorates and Elections Act of 1893 shall mututis mutandis, apply in respect of the powers, duties, and proceedings of the said Committee acting under the authority of this section.

16. The result of every election for Representatives of New South Wales shall be reported to and certified by the Chief Secretary in manner prescribed, whose certificate shall be conclusive, except in proceedings for contesting the validity of the election.

17. When the first elections have been held in three or more Colonies, a meeting of the Convention shall be convened for such time and place as a majority of the Governors of such Colonies may decide, or in case of an equal division, as the Governor of the senior of such Colonies may fix.

18. The Convention may adopt Standing Orders, and may provide for keeping and publishing records and journals of its proceedings, and for the conduct of its business in such manner as may be thought fit; and in cases not otherwise provided for, the proceedings of the Convention shall be regulated by the Standing Orders and practice of the House of Commons so far as applicable.

28. So soon as the Convention has finally adopted a Federal Constitution as required by the preceding section, and has disposed of all incidental business, copies certified by the President shall be supplied in duplicate to the Members Convention, and the President shall declare the proceedings of the Convention closed.

29. The Representatives of New South Wales shall cease to hold office at the expiration of a period to be proclaimed by the Governor in the Gazette.

30. New South Wales shall contribute to the payment of the expenses of the meeting and proceedings of the Convention in the proportion which the population of New South Wales bears to the total population of the Colonies represented at the Convention and the Colonial Treasurer shall make such payment accordingly out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

PART II

The Submission to the Electors.

31. Within fourteen days after the close of the proceedings of the Convention, the certified copies of the Constitution shall be forwarded by the President of the Convention and by the Representatives of New South Wales or one of them to the Governor.

32. So soon as practicable after the close of the proceedings of the Convention, the question of the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution shall be referred and submitted to the vote of all persons in New South Wales qualified and entitled to vote for the election of Members of the Legislative Assembly.

The voting shall be taken throughout New South Wales as one Electoral District.

33. Each voter shall vote by ballot "Yes" or "No" on the question, in accordance with the direction on the Ballot paper in the Schedule hereto, and all votes shall be taken on the same day.

34. No person shall vote more than once on the question.

35. The majority of votes shall decide the question, and if the Constitution be thereby rejected, no further action shall be taken pursuant to this Act: Provided that any number of votes in the affirmative less than fifty thousand shall be equivalent to the rejection of the Bill.
PART III

The Transmission for Legislative Enactment.

Addresses to the Queen

36. If two Colonies, in addition to New South Wales, accept the Constitution, both Houses of Parliament may adopt Addresses to the Queen, praying that the Constitution may be passed into law by the Imperial Parliament upon receipt of similar addresses from the Parliaments of two such Colonies.

Transmission

37. When Addresses have been agreed to pursuant to the preceding section, the same shall be transmitted to the Queen with a certified copy of the Constitution.

PART IV

Supplemental

Penalties

38. If any person votes or attempts to vote more than once contrary to sections fourteen or thirty-five he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds, or, at the option of the Court, to imprisonment not exceeding six calendar months.

Writs

39. For the purpose of holding elections of Representatives of New South Wales, and of submitting the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution to the electors, the Governor may cause writs to be issued in such form and addressed as he thinks fit.

Application of general law

40. Unless and until otherwise prescribed, the laws relating to the conduct of elections for the Legislative Assembly, the proceedings before and at and subsequent to such elections, the trial of disputed elections, electoral offences, and all incidental matters, shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to the election of Representatives of New South Wales, and to the proceedings for submitting the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution to the electors.

Regulations

41. The Governor may make regulations prescribing the mode of nominating candidates, of holding elections of Representatives of New South Wales, and submitting the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution to the electors, and generally for the purposes of carrying into effect such provisions of this Act as relate to New South Wales.

Publication of regulations

42. All such regulations shall be published in the Gazette, and on such publication shall have the force of law; and all such regulations shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after the making thereof, or if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, within fourteen days after the next meeting of Parliament.
43. Any such regulation may provide for the enforcement thereof by penalty not exceeding fifty pounds, or, at the option of the Court, by imprisonment not exceeding six calendar months.

44. Penalties imposed by, and offences against, the provisions of this Act, or any regulations made thereunder, may be recovered, heard, and determined by a Police or Stipendiary Magistrate, or any two Justices of the Peace in Petty Sessions.

ALASKA CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

ENABLING ACT - 1955
Extract from the Alaska Constitutional Convention Enabling Act.

Alaska Constitutional Convention Enabling Act

CHAPTER 46

SESSION LAWS OF ALASKA

1955

AN ACT

To provide for the holding of a constitutional convention to prepare a constitution for the State of Alaska; to submit the constitution to the people for adoption or rejection; to prepare for the admission of Alaska as a State; to make an appropriation; and setting an effective date.

(C.S. for HB. 1)

Be it Enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska:

Section 1. A constitutional convention, comprised of delegates elected by the legal voters of the Territory of Alaska, shall assemble at the University of Alaska, College, Alaska, on the 8th day of November, 1955, at ten o'clock a.m., or as soon thereafter as a quorum shall be present, for the purpose of preparing and agreeing upon a constitution for the proposed State of Alaska. The convention shall meet for not more than seventy-five days but may, at its discretion, recess for a period of not to exceed fifteen days for the purpose of holding public hearings in Alaska on proposed provisions of the constitution.

Section 2. Delegates to the convention shall possess the qualifications of legal voters of Alaska and shall have been residents of Alaska for not less than three years immediately preceding the first day of the convention. The holding of the office of delegate or any other office of the convention shall not constitute a disqualification for selection for or the holding of any other office, and the holding of any other office, except an appointive office under the Federal Government shall not constitute a disqualification for election to or the holding of office as a delegate or any other office of the convention.

Section 3. There are hereby created the following election districts from which delegates to the convention shall be elected. These election districts shall be comprised of the several recording districts of Alaska which shall be known as "local election districts", the judicial divisions of Alaska, and the Territory of Alaska at Large:

- Election District No. 1—Ketchikan and Hyder Recording Districts.
- Election District No. 2—Wrangell and Petersburg Recording Districts.
- Election District No. 3—Sitka Recording District.
- Election District No. 4—Juneau Recording District.
- Election District No. 5—Haines and Skagway Recording Districts.
- Election District No. 6—First Judicial Division.
- Election District No. 7—Cape Nome and Wade Hampton Recording Districts.
- Election District No. 8—Fair-haven and Noatak-Kobuk Recording Districts.
- Election District No. 9—Second Judicial Division.
- Election District No. 10—Cordova and McCarthy Recording Districts.
- Election District No. 11—Valdez and Chitina Recording Districts.
Election District No. 12—Seward and Whittier Recording Districts.
Election District No. 13—Kenai, Homer and Seldovia Recording Districts.
Election District No. 14—Kodiak and Aleutian Islands Recording Districts.
Election District No. 15—Anchorage Recording Districts.
Election District No. 16—Palmer, Wasilla and Talkeetna Recording Districts.
Election District No. 17—Iliam, Kvichak and Bristol Bay Recording Districts.
Election District No. 18—Third of the Judicial Division.
Election District No. 19—Bethel, Kuskokwim, Mt. McKinley Innoko, Nulato, Nenana, Hot Springs, Rampart and Fort Gibbon Recording Districts.
Election District No. 20—Fairbanks Recording District
Election District No. 21—Fourth Judicial Division.
Election District No. 22—Territory of Alaska at Large.

Section 4. The convention shall consist of fifty-five delegates apportioned among the election districts as follows:

Election District No. 1 — One Delegate.
Election District No. 2 — One Delegate.
Election District No. 3 — One Delegate
Election District No. 4 — One Delegate
Election District No. 5 — One Delegate
Election District No. 6 — Seven Delegates
Election District No. 7 — One Delegate
Election District No. 8 — One Delegate
Election District No. 9 — Four Delegates
Election District No. 10 — One Delegates
Election District No. 11 — One Delegate
Election District No. 12 — One Delegate
Election District No. 13 — One Delegate
Election District No. 14 — One Delegate
Election District No. 15 — One Delegate
Election District No. 16 — One Delegate
Election District No. 17 — One Delegate
Election District No. 18 — Twelve Delegates
Election District No. 19 — One Delegate
Election District No. 20 — One Delegate
Election District No. 21 — Eight Delegates
Election District No. 22 — Seven Delegates.

Section 5. A special election for the election of delegates shall be held throughout Alaska on September 13, 1955. The Governor of Alaska shall prepare and furnish all ballots, certificates, and forms necessary for the holding of the election, which shall in general be conducted, including the making of returns, the canvassing of ballots, and the ascertaining of results substantially in the manner fixed by the laws governing the election of legislators in general elections in Alaska, including rotation of names on the ballot. The Governor may employ such technical and other personnel as may be necessary to assist him in the preparation for and conduct of the election provided for herein. The governor may make such reasonable rules and regulations regarding the conduct of the election, the counting of ballots, the preparation, transmission and canvassing of returns, and other matters relating to the election, as may appear necessary and are consistent with the purposes of the special election provided for herein.

Section 6. Candidates for the office of delegate shall be nominated by petition filed in person or by mail with the clerk of the court of the judicial division in which the candidate is a resident on or before May 10, 1955. Each petition shall be accompanied by a fee of ten dollars, except that the fee for candidates for election from the Territory at large shall be forty dollars. Each nominating petition shall be signed by legally qualified voters of Alaska residing within the election district in and for which the delegates nominated are to be elected equal in number to at least five per cent of the number of votes cast in the election district in the General Election of 1954, provided that no nominating petition need contain more than two hundred signatures nor may it contain less than fifty signatures, in any election district.

Section 7. Each nominating petition shall contain the name of not more than one candidate and shall set forth the name, place of residence and post office address of the candidate thereby nominated, that the nomination is for the office of delegate to the constitutional convention to be convened on November 8, 1955, that the petitioners are legally qualified to vote for such candidates and pledge them-selves to support and vote for the person named in such petition, and that this petition, together with all other petitions theretofore signed by them, does not nominate a greater number of candidates than the number of delegates to be elected in the election district for which the nominations are made. Every voter signing a nominating petition shall add to his signature his place of residence, post office address, and street number, if any. No voter shall sign a petition or petitions for a greater number of candidates than are to be elected in the election district in which he resides, except that any petitioner may sign not more than seven petitions of candidates for election as delegates from the district composed of the Territory of Alaska at large, in addition to the petition or petitions of candidates from the petitioner's local and judicial election districts. It is the intent of this Act that qualified petitioners may sign not more nominating petitions than there are delegates authorized from the local and judicial election districts in which the petitioner resides, and in addition may sign not more than seven nominating petitions for candidates seeking election from the Territory at Large.

Section 8. Each nominating petition shall, before it may be filed with the clerk of the court, contain an acceptance of such nomination in writing, signed and verified by an oath or affirmation of the candidate therein nominated, upon or annexed to such petition. Such acceptance shall certify that the candidate shall have been a resident of the election district for which he is nominated for at least one year and that he is a qualified voter in the election district for which he is nominated. Such acceptance shall also certify that the nominee consents to enter as a candidate at the ensuing special election for the election of delegates to a constitutional convention, and that if elected he agrees to take office and serve as a delegate from the election district in which he is nominated.

Section 9. If any delegate from any election district shall die, resign, or otherwise become disqualified from serving, or if a vacancy occurs for any reason whatsoever, the vacancy shall be filled by the candidate not theretofore certified as elected who received the next highest number of votes amongst the candidates in the election district in which the vacancy occurred. If a vacancy should again occur in such district, it shall be filled in like manner from amongst the remaining candidates. Any election contest which results in a tie shall be resolved by the drawing of lots between the competing candidates, and the loser of the drawing shall be considered second only to the winner and shall hold such standing among the balance of the winning candidates.

Section 10. All nominating petitions and their acceptances shall when filed be and remain open for public inspection during regular business hours, at the office where filed until May 20, 1955; thereafter they shall be transmitted to the Governor of Alaska for determination of the candidates nominated and for permanent filing in the office of the Secretary of Alaska. Determination of the validity of petitions shall be made initially by the Governor of Alaska, and recourse by candidates believing themselves aggrieved may be had by appeal from the determination of the Governor to the canvassing board, the decision of which shall be final. Objections to petitions may be raised by any qualified voter of the election district from which the candidate is nominated, and such objection must be stated in writing to the Governor of Alaska on or before May 25, 1955. Not later than May 31, 1955, the Governor shall make his determination as to the candidates nominated from each election district and shall thereupon certify the names designated for placement on the ballot for each such district.

Section 11. The election of delegates shall be conducted without any reference to the political party affiliations of the candidates, and the ballots used shall be nonpartisan in every respect. A separate ballot shall be prepared for each local election district, and each such ballot shall contain (a) the names of the candidates running for the office of delegate from that district, (b) the names of the candidates running for the office of delegate from the judicial division election district in which the local election district is situated, and (c) the names of the candidates running for the office of delegate from the district which comprises the Territory at Large.

Section 12. The candidate or candidates receiving the greatest number of votes in the election district for which nominated shall be deemed elected for that district, and the Governor of Alaska shall issue to them certificates of election in the manner otherwise prescribed by law for persons elected to the Legislature of Alaska.

Section 13. The Governor of Alaska shall open the convention and preside until temporary officers are selected. The convention shall be the judge of the qualifications of its members, their election, or appointment. It shall have the power by vote of a majority of the delegates to which the body is entitled to choose a president and secretary and all other appropriate officers, to prescribe their functions, powers and duties, and to make rules and regulations for the conduct of its business. Following its organization the convention shall declare on behalf of the people of the proposed State that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; thereafter, the convention shall proceed to prepare a constitution, which shall be republican in form and shall contain the provisions expressly required by any Act of the Congress of the United States providing for the admission of Alaska as a State, and a State government for the proposed States, and for this purpose the convention shall have power to make ordinances and to take all measures necessary or proper in preparation for the admission of Alaska as a State of the Union.

Section 14. After a constitution and State government have been framed, the convention shall provide by ordinance for submission of the constitution, and such ordinances as may properly be submitted, to the people of the proposed State for ratification or rejection at an election to be held at a date to be fixed by the convention not less than forty nor later than one hundred twenty days from the date of adjournment of the convention, at which election the persons entitled to vote for delegates under this Act shall be entitled to vote on the ratification or rejection of the constitution and the ordinances submitted, under such rules and regulations as the convention may prescribe. The returns of this election shall be made to the Governor of Alaska and shall be canvassed substantially in the manner now provided by law for the canvass of votes cast in Territorial Elections.

Section 15. The convention shall provide by ordinance that after the constitution and ordinances submitted shall have been ratified by the people of the Territory by a majority of the legal votes cast thereon, the Governor shall forthwith submit a certified copy of the same through the President of the United States to the Congress for approval or disapproval, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon.

Section 16. The convention shall provide by ordinance that in case of the ratification of the constitution by the people and of its approval by the Congress, or by the President, as may be provided in the Enabling Act, there shall be a process of election, at such time and in such manner as the convention may prescribe, in which the qualified voters of Alaska shall choose officers for a full State government, including a governor, members of the legislature, such other officers as the constitution shall prescribe, and the authorized number of Representatives and Senators in the Congress of the United States. The persons elected hereunder shall assume their offices, and the State government shall become in effect, at the time and in the manner that the Congress may provide in enabling the admission of Alaska as a State.

Section 17. Until the admission of Alaska as a State, all of the officers of the Territory shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in and for the Territory of Alaska, and the laws of the Territory shall also remain in force and effect.

Section 18. The convention shall have power to incur such expenses as may be necessary, including but not limited to expenses for employment of such clerical, technical, and professional personnel as it may require, in order to exercise the powers conferred and to perform the duties imposed by this Act.

Section 19. The delegates shall receive a per diem of twenty dollars for each day in attendance at, including time spent going to and returning from, the convention; and they shall be reimbursed for their actual travel costs incurred in attending upon their duties as delegates. In addition they shall receive for their services the sum of fifteen dollars per day as compensation for each day's attendance while the convention is in session.

Section 20. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for defraying the expenses of the elections provided for herein and the expenses of the convention, including compensation of the delegates, and for all other purposes of this Act. The disbursements for all costs attributable to the elections of delegates to the convention, not to exceed $60,000, shall be made upon vouchers certified by the Governor of Alaska. All other disbursements of monies appropriated vouchers certified by the president of the convention.

Section 21. This Act shall be in effect on and after its passage and approval, or upon its becoming law without such approval.

Approved March 19, 1955
APPENDIX 6

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF HAWAII

ARTICLE XVII
THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF HAWAII

ARTICLE XVII

REVISION AND AMENDMENT

METHODS OF PROPOSAL

SECTION 1. Revisions of or amendments to this constitution may be proposed by constitutional convention or by the legislature.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

SECTION 2. The legislature may submit to the electorate at any general or special election the question, "Shall there be a convention to propose a revision of or amendments to the Constitution?" If any nine-year period shall elapse during which the question shall not have been submitted, the lieutenant governor shall certify the question, to be voted on at the first general election following the expiration of such period.

ELECTION OF DELEGATES

If a majority of the ballots cast upon such a question be in the affirmative, delegates to the convention shall be chosen at the next regular election unless the legislature shall provide for the election of delegates at a special election.

Notwithstanding any provision in this constitution to the contrary, other than Section 3 of Article XVI, any qualified voter of the district concerned shall be eligible to membership in the convention.

The legislature shall provide for the number of delegates to the convention, the areas from which they shall be elected and the manner in which the convention shall convene. The legislatures shall also provide for the necessary facilities and equipment for the convention. The convention shall have the same powers and privileges, as nearly as practicable, as provided for the convention of 1978.

MEETING

The constitutional convention shall convene not less than five months prior to the next regularly scheduled general election.

ORGANIZATION; PROCEDURE

The convention shall determine its own organization and rules of procedure. It shall be the sole judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its members and, by a two-thirds vote may suspend or remove any member for cause. The governor shall fill any vacancy by appointment of a qualified voter from the district concerned.
RATIFICATION; APPROPRIATIONS

The convention shall provide for the time and manner in which the proposed constitutional revision or amendments shall be submitted to a vote of the electorate; provided that each amendment shall be submitted in the form of a question embracing but one subject and provided further, that each question shall have designate spaces to mark YES or NO on the amendment.

At least thirty days prior to the submission of any proposed or amendments, the convention shall make available for public inspection, a full text of the proposed amendments. Every public library, office of the clerk of each county, and the chief election officer shall be provided such texts and shall make them available for public inspection. The full text of any proposed revision or amendments shall also be made available for inspection at every polling place on the day of the election at which such revision or amendments are submitted.

The convention shall as provided by law, be responsible for a program of voter education concerning each proposed revision or amendment to submitted to the electorate.

The revision of amendments shall be effective only if approved at a general election by a majority of all the votes tallied upon the question, this majority constituting at least fifty per cent of the total vote cast at the election, or at a special election by a majority of all the votes tallied upon the question, this majority constituting at least thirty per cent of the total number of registered voters.

The provisions of this section shall be self-executing, but the legislature shall make the necessary appropriations and may enact legislation to facilitate their operation.

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY LEGISLATURE

SECTION 3. The legislature may propose amendments to the constitution by adopting the same in the manner required for legislation, by a two-thirds vote of each house on final reading at any session, after either or both houses shall have given the governor at least ten days written notice of the final form of the proposed amendment, or, with or without such notice, by a majority vote of each house on final reading at each of two successive sessions.

Upon such adoption, the proposed amendments shall be entered upon the journals, with the ayes and noes, and published once in each of four successive weeks in at least one newspaper of general circulation in each senatorial district whereto such a newspaper is published within the two months period immediately preceding the next general election.

At such general election the proposed amendments shall be submitted to the electorate for approval or rejection upon a separate ballot.

The conditions of and requirements for ratification of such proposed amendments shall be the same as provided in section 2 of this article for ratification at a general election.

VETO

SECTION 4. No proposal for amendment of the constitution adopted in either manner provided by this article shall be subject to veto by the governor.
CONFLICTING REVISIONS OR AMENDMENTS

SECTION 5. If a revision or amendment proposed by a constitutional convention is in conflict with a revision or amendment proposed by the legislature and both are submitted to the electorate at the same election and both are approved, then the revision or amendment proposed by the convention shall prevail. If conflicting revisions or amendments are proposed by the same body and are submitted to the electorate at the same election and both are approved, then the revision or amendment receiving the highest number of votes shall prevail.

INTRODUCTION

The Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development, formerly a Select Committee, in responses to its terms of reference, has been working for some years on matters that could be dealt with in a new constitution for the Northern Territory.

The Committee has been proceeding with the preparation of a draft constitution in the light of the various submissions and comments made to it.

The work reached the point where an exposure draft of the main elements of the proposed constitution has been prepared. That exposure draft follows this introduction. It is annotated with an explanation of each clause, with variations that would be required in the event that a republican system of government was to be adopted, and if the constitution was to be brought into operation before any grant of Statehood to the Territory. Cross references to the Committee's issued papers are also included for ease of reference.

The exposure draft does not include some essential provisions not yet finalised, such as the amendment procedures, transitional arrangements and definitions. Other matters may yet be included.

This exposure draft is issued for public comment and submissions before the Committee settles the draft constitution and finally reports to the Legislative Assembly. It does not represent the final views of the Committee. In some cases, it offers one or more alternatives where members have not been able to agree on a particular position.

Following final report to the Legislative Assembly, the further procedure for adoption of the Constitution previously, outlined in the Committee's issued papers are envisaged. These include a Territory Constitutional Convention and Territory referendum.

TERMS OF REFERENCE

On 28 August 1985, the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory of Australia by resolution established the Select Committee on Constitutional Development.

Amendments to the Committee's original terms of reference were made when it was reconstituted on 28 April 1987. On 30 November 1989, the Legislative Assembly further resolved to amend the terms of reference by changing the Committee's status to a Sessional Committee. On 4 December 1990 and on 27 June 1994, it was again reconstituted with no further change to its terms of reference.

The original resolutions were passed in conjunction with proposals then being developed in the Northern Territory for a grant of Statehood to the Territory within the Australian federal system. The terms of reference include, as a major aspect of the work of the Committee, a consideration of matters connected with a new State constitution.

The primary terms of reference of the Sessional Committee are as follows:
"(1)... a committee to be known as the Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development, be established to inquire into, report and make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on -

(a) a constitution for the new State and the principles upon which it should be drawn, including -

   (i) legislative powers;
   (ii) executive powers;
   (iii) judicial powers; and
   (iv) the method to be adopted to have a draft new State constitution approved by or on behalf of the people of the Northern Territory; and

(b) the issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the Federation as a new State; and

(c) such other constitutional and legal matters as may be referred to it by -

   (i) relevant Ministers, or
   (ii) resolution of the Assembly.

(2) the Committee undertake a role in promoting the awareness of constitutional issues to the Northern Territory and Australian populations."

DISCUSSION AND INFORMATION PAPERS AND REPORTS

The Committee has prepared and issued a number of papers and an interim report arising from its terms of reference, as follows -

* A Discussion Paper on a Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory, plus an illustrated booklet of the same name.
* Discussion Paper No. 4, Recognition of Aboriginal Customary Law.
* Discussion Paper No. 5, The Merits or Otherwise of Bringing an NT Constitution into Force Before Statehood.
* Discussion Paper No. 6, Aboriginal Rights and Issues - Options for Entrenchment.
* Discussion Paper No. 8, A Northern Territory Bill of Rights?
* Discussion Paper No. 9, Constitutional Recognition of Local Government.
* Information Paper No. 1, Options for a Grant of Statehood.

TABLING STATEMENT

delivered in the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly on 22 June 1995
by the
Hon. Steve Hatton, MLA
Chairman, Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development

I lay on the table an Exposure Draft of a proposed Northern Territory constitution.

I move that the paper be printed.

Mr Speaker, I move that the Assembly note the paper.

Mr Speaker, some years ago, this House took the bold initiative of establishing a Select Committee to draft a new constitution for the Northern Territory. This was a bipartisan Committee and I am pleased to say it still is a bipartisan Committee. Let me express my appreciation for the co-operation of both sides of this House that are represented on this Committee and for the excellent work of its past and present Members. Their contribution has been outstanding. The Committee has worked hard over the years, researching, preparing papers, holding hearings and a variety of other activities directed at promoting the cause of a new, homegrown Territory constitution. We have worked well together. The Members are committed to work towards the constitutional development of the Northern Territory, with the maximum involvement of the citizens of the Northern Territory in the process. This necessarily involves the preparation of a new constitution for a new Millennium. Our terms of reference require as much, and now you see the first fruits of our labours, the first draft of the essential parts of a new constitution.

Let me assure Honourable Members that this is only a first draft, not the final proposals of the Committee. It is not a complete draft. Additional draft clauses will be released for comment as they are completed.

The Exposure Draft takes into account the many comments and submissions received by the Committee in response to its previous invitations. It seeks to provoke discussion and further comment. Let the citizens of the Territory be assured that their wishes will be taken into account and given weight. It is a process that is not going to be rushed. It is an ongoing process, seeking to achieve the maximum degree of consensus as to how the Northern Territory should be governed. We are all tired of having the future of the Northern Territory decided by people thousands of kilometres from this place. Let Territorians decide on this matter. Let us chart our own future within the Australian federation.

Mr Speaker, the essential aspects are there in this Exposure Draft for all to read — the legislature, the executive, the judiciary, the sources of law of the Northern Territory — there are 7 parts to this Exposure Draft, and further parts will be added later this year.
In particular, for the first time in Australia's constitutional history, we recite in the Exposure Draft the history and circumstances of the Aboriginal people of this Country. The first Preamble reads —

"Before the proclamation of the Colony of New South Wales in 1788 and since time immemorial all or most of the geographical area of Australia that now constitutes the Northern Territory of Australia (the Northern Territory) was occupied by various groups of Aboriginal people under an orderly and mutually recognised system of governance and laws by which they lived and defined their relationships between each other, with the land and with their natural and spiritual environment."

This recognises the major role of Aboriginal people in the foundation of this Country and the great contribution they have to make. They are an integral and valued part of the Territory community.

Mr Speaker, the Exposure Draft takes into account the possibility that Australia could become a Republic on or before the Northern Territory constitution comes into effect. In that event, the Exposure Draft indicates that certain changes will be required. Further information on this can be obtained by reference to the Committee's Discussion Paper no. 7, An Australian Republic? Implications for the Northern Territory.

In addition, if the constitution was to be brought into operation before a grant of Statehood to replace the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978; slight changes may also be required. The Exposure Draft also indicates these. The annotations on each clause are to assist public discussion and include a short description of each clause plus cross references to the Committee's Discussion and Information Papers and Reports.

Moreover, the Committee recognises that there will be no major constitutional development in the Northern Territory without the support and recognition of the basic rights of Aboriginal people. However, there is a concern in Aboriginal society which values its various indigenous cultural circumstances, particularly land rights, sacred sites, and customary law; the concern being that these rights should be constitutionally protected, otherwise they could be at risk after Statehood.

This Exposure Draft reflects a recommendation to satisfy these concerns, whilst presuming the transfer of the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act 1976 to become a law of the Northern Territory.

Part of this proposal is to introduce the concept of organic laws into our new constitution. This type of law would have precedence over other statutory laws and would require a large majority of votes of Parliament — two thirds or three quarters of the Members of the House over two consecutive sittings with a minimum time gap of two months — to be enacted or amended.

Other matters are included in the Exposure Draft, such as the acquisition of less than freehold interests over Aboriginal land on just terms, for the public benefit. It also includes restrictions on voluntary dealings over freehold Aboriginal title after judicial enquiry. This can only happen after the Aboriginal people concerned have been fully informed and where there is a genuine desire on the part of those Aboriginal people to enter into the proposed transaction.
Furthermore, the enquiry must be satisfied that the proposed transaction is also in the interests of those Aboriginal people concerned.

Issues associated with Aboriginal rights, including land rights, are clearly amongst the most sensitive issues associated with the development of our own constitution. The Committee's proposal is aimed at finding a means of addressing these issues in a way that can receive broad support from within the Northern Territory community.

This Exposure Draft is based on the premise that the Northern Territory is to be placed on an equal footing with existing States as a precondition to any grant of Statehood. Let us not accept any second class grant. Let us insist on our constitutional rights as a new State in the same way as existing States. This equality will be achieved in part by inviting all Territorians to participate in the process of adopting their own constitution. In other respects, equality will be achieved by negotiating acceptable terms and conditions for Statehood with the Commonwealth Government. These negotiated matters may not all be dealt with in the Northern Territory constitution as such, but will be incorporated in a memorandum of agreement between the two Governments. One condition must, however, be accepted; namely, that the Commonwealth will accept the new constitution — as finally adopted by Territorians in a Constitutional Convention and as passed in a Territory referendum — without further change.

Mr Speaker, many changes to the Exposure Draft will no doubt be made in the future. Let us have open discussion on the matter. We do not seek to avoid debate, but rather seek to encourage it. The final document undoubtedly will have been considered in detail through the long process of Committee deliberations, Assembly debate and the Territory Constitutional Convention. Territorians must be allowed to frame their own constitution as a framework for a united and peaceful society into the 21st Century. It must be a document for all Territorians and they must have a sense of ownership of it. Let us have the vision to work towards that end.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Exposure Draft to Honourable Members.

PREAMBLE

It is normal for a Constitution to have a Preamble. The Preamble would be a part of the Constitution and could affect its meaning and interpretation, but would not in itself be directly enforceable.

1. Before the proclamation of the Colony of New South Wales in 1788 and since time immemorial all or most of the geographical area of Australia that now constitutes the Northern Territory of Australia (the Northern Territory) was occupied by various groups of Aboriginal people under an orderly and mutually recognised system of governance and laws by which they lived and defined their relationships between each other, with the land and with their natural and spiritual environment;

Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 1

Provide for the first time in Australia some constitutional recognition of the Aboriginal people, their system of governance and laws and their relationship with the land and with their natural and spiritual environment prior to European occupation. This follows from the rejection of the doctrine of terra nullius in the Mabo case. The draft Constitution that follows contains specific references to Aboriginal rights as existing at the present time.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

2. In 1788, that part of Australia East of the 135th parallel of Longitude East was proclaimed a Colony of Great Britain as The Colony of New South Wales;

3. By Letters Patent of 1825, the boundaries of the Colony of New South Wales were extended to the 129th parallel of longitude East, thus encompassing all of the area of the Northern Territory;

4. The Northern Territory remained a part of the Colony of New South Wales (except for that period in 1846 when it became, and while it remained, part of The Colony of North Australia) until 1863 when, by Letters Patent, it became a part of the Province of South Australia;
5. The Province of South Australia became a State of the Commonwealth on the proclamation of the Commonwealth of Australia in 1901 under the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act of the Imperial Parliament;

6. The Northern Territory Acceptance Act 1910 of the Commonwealth of Australia provided for the ratifying of an Agreement between the Commonwealth and the State of South Australia for the surrender by that State to, and the acceptance by the Commonwealth of, the Northern Territory and provided for the acceptance by the Commonwealth of the Northern Territory;

7. By the Constitution of the Commonwealth it is provided that the Parliament of the Commonwealth may make laws for the government of any Territory surrendered by any State to and accepted by the Commonwealth;

8. The Parliament of the Commonwealth, by the Northern Territory (Administration) Act 1910, made provision for the government of the Northern Territory, and by the Northern Territory Supreme Court Act 1961 provided for its Supreme Court;

Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 2 through to 8

Provides for a summary of the historical and constitutional development of the Northern Territory from 1788 to 1911 when the Northern Territory came under Commonwealth control as a territory of the Commonwealth. These parts of the Preamble largely follow the wording of the recitals in the Northern Territory (Administration) Act and in the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See previous comments under Preamble 1.

9. In 1978, because of the political and economic development of the Northern Territory, the Parliament of the Commonwealth, by the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978, conferred self-government on the Northern Territory and, for that purpose provided, among other things, for the establishment of separate political, representative and administrative institutions in the Northern Territory and gave the Northern Territory control over its own Treasury;
10. The self-government conferred on the Northern Territory by the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978 was a limited grant of legislative and executive powers, the Commonwealth retaining certain reserve powers and a power to disallow Northern Territory legislation. There was also retained in the Parliament of the Commonwealth a plenary grant of legislative powers in respect of the Northern Territory under section 122 of the Constitution of the Commonwealth, unlimited by subject matter;

Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 10

This preamble notes that under Self-Government, the Northern Territory was granted only limited legislative and executive powers and that under section 122 of the Australian Constitution the Commonwealth has still retained ultimate control of the Northern Territory over Northern Territory matters.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See previous comments under Preamble 1.

11. In 1979 the Parliament of the Commonwealth enacted the Northern Territory Supreme Court (Repeal) Act 1979 and the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory enacted the Supreme Court Act;
A new Constitution for the Northern Territory and Tabling Statement

Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 11

Provides that the Commonwealth in 1979 passed legislation allowing the Northern Territory to establish its own Supreme Court by a Territory Act, thus completing the transfer of the three traditional arms of government to the Northern Territory — legislature, executive and judiciary.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See previous comments under Preamble 1.

12. A Committee of the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory on the Constitutional Development of the Northern Territory was established in 1985, and produced and tabled various papers and reports in the Legislative Assembly, including a draft constitution for the Northern Territory;

Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 12

Provides for the recognition of the work done by the Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Sessional Committee (previously Select Committee) on Constitutional Development in promoting issues on constitutional development and the development of a draft constitution for the Northern Territory

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See previous comments under Preamble 1.

13. The Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory, by the Constitutional Convention Act 1996, established a Convention comprising a broad representation of the community of the Northern Territory to receive and consider the recommendations of the Legislative Assembly on the establishing and form of a new Constitution for the Northern Territory and, on the x day of xxx 1998 that Convention, in accordance with the Act, ratified a draft of that Constitution, in the following form, to be put to a referendum of the electors of the Northern Territory for approval;
Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 13

Provides for the recognition of the work done by a Constitutional Convention made up of participants from all walks of life in the Northern Territory in formulating a final Northern Territory constitution as put to the people of the Northern Territory in a referendum. Such a Convention was proposed by the Committee for the purpose of producing a settled draft of the new Constitution before it was put to a Northern Territory Referendum.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See previous comments under Preamble 1 and note the Interim Report No. 1, A Northern Territory Constitutional Convention, 1995.

14. On the approval of this Constitution at that referendum by a vote of more than the number of Northern Territory electors prescribed in legislation enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory, it is intended to submit the Constitution as so approved to the Commonwealth to be adopted as the Constitution of the Northern Territory and for the contemporaneous repeal of the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978 of the Commonwealth;

Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 14

Provides for the recognition of the Northern Territory constitution as adopted by the people of the Northern Territory and voting in a referendum. It anticipates that the draft Constitution as settled by the Constitutional Convention will in fact be passed at that referendum, following the procedure originally proposed by the Committee.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change. However, if Australia as a whole becomes a Republic, before the new Constitution comes into force, this may also need to be reflected in a new Preamble after this clause.

(b) Pre—Statehood: This clause has been drafted to formally recognise that the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act will be repealed by the Commonwealth Parliament and that the new Constitution of the Northern Territory will be recognised by the Commonwealth Parliament either prior to a grant of Statehood or at the point of that grant.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See previous comments under Preamble 1.

15. The people of the Northern Territory, voting at the referendum, have freely chosen to associate in accordance with this Constitution as free, diverse yet equal citizens and to be governed under it in accordance with democratic principles,
Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 15

Provides that this document as adopted by the people of the Northern Territory voting at a referendum is to be the Constitution of the Northern Territory. It assumes that the referendum will be successful, although of course if it is not successful, the Constitution will not proceed to the next stage of implementation by the Commonwealth.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre-Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See previous comments under Preamble 1.

NOW THEREFORE it is declared that this is the Constitution of the Northern Territory.
PART 1 - THE NORTHERN TERRITORY

1. ESTABLISHMENT OF BODY POLITIC

There is hereby established a body politic under the Crown in and for the Northern Territory of Australia by the name of the Northern Territory.

Purpose of the Clause:
This is a fundamental clause in the new Constitution. It provides for the establishment of a new political entity under the Crown for the Northern Territory of Australia and for the new name of the political body to be called the Northern Territory. This entity will be the new Government of the Northern Territory under the new Constitution and will replace the political entity established under the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978. If the Northern Territory also becomes a new State, this new political entity will be the new State Government for the Northern Territory.

Variations:
(a) Republic: Delete "under the Crown" in the clause.
(b) Pre-Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: It is implicit in the various papers issued by the Committee that the new Constitution will establish a new Government for the Northern Territory, but with elements of continuity with the existing Northern Territory Government under the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act. Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987, makes the point that while Australia remains formally monarchical in structure, the new Territory Government must be likewise be formally monarchical - see Part G. See also the Committee's Discussion Paper No. 7, An Australian Republic? Implications for the Northern Territory, 1994 in regard to the implications for the Northern Territory should Australia become a Republic.

PART 2 - THE LEGAL SYSTEM OF THE NORTHERN TERRITORY

2.1 THE LAWS

The laws of the Northern Territory consist of -

(a) this Constitution;
(b) the Organic Laws;
(c) the Acts of the Parliament;
(d) laws of the Northern Territory in force immediately before the commencement of, and continued in force by, this Constitution;
(e) laws made under or adopted by or under this Constitution or any of those laws, including subordinate legislative enactments;
(f) the common law of the Northern Territory; and

(g) other laws recognised by this Constitution.

Purpose of the Clause: 2.1

This Clause defines what are the laws of the Northern Territory under the new Constitution. It includes a new category of Organic laws (see clause 2.3 below). It will also include Aboriginal customary law on the same basis as the common law in force in the Northern Territory.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: The subject of Northern Territory sources of law is discussed in Discussion Paper No. 4, Recognition of Aboriginal Customary Law, 1992: Part D. At page 4 of that Paper, the Committee noted that it is a fundamental principle that the public should be able to ascertain with some certainty what the laws are applicable to the Territory as part of the rule of law. It was not unreasonable to expect the new Constitution to specify the sources of law applying to the community.

2.1.1 ABORIGINAL CUSTOMARY LAW

Aboriginal customary law, to the extent of its existence in the Northern Territory immediately before the commencement of this Constitution —

Purpose of the Clause: 2.1.1

Provides for the first time for the recognition of current Aboriginal customary law as a source of law in the Northern Territory, for its continued implementation and enforcement among Aboriginal persons themselves by traditional Aboriginal methods and also pursuant to court decisions to the extent that it is already part of the common law or pursuant to existing court practice, but otherwise only as provided by this Constitution, an Organic Law, or an Act of the Parliament. Two alternatives are offered for consideration.

Alternative 1 - The first alternative omits any reference to the enforceability of Aboriginal customary law as between Aboriginal people themselves. It will be left to the courts to decide to what extent it will be given effect to as a source of law.

Alternative 2 - The second alternative includes reference to enforceability of Aboriginal customary law as between Aboriginal people themselves in accordance with that law, thus making it clear that it is an enforceable system of law in respect of those persons who consider themselves bound by it.

In addition, under either alternative, the existing law and practice will also continue.

Subject thereto, Northern Territory institutions and officers will only be able to enforce Aboriginal customary law in so far as the Constitution, an Organic Law or an Act of Parliament so permits.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre-Statehood: No change.

2.2 CONSTRUCTION OF LAWS

All Northern Territory Laws (other than this Constitution) shall be read and construed subject to -

(a) in any case - this Constitution, the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act and the Constitution of the Commonwealth and the Australia Act 1986;

(b) in the case of Acts of the Parliament and laws of the Northern Territory in force immediately before the commencement of, and continued in force by, this Constitution (but not including any subordinate legislative enactments made under such Acts or laws) - any relevant Organic Laws;

(c) in the case of subordinate legislative enactments - the Organic Laws and the laws by or under which they were enacted or made; and
(d) in the case of other laws in force in the Northern Territory - the laws mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c), and so as not to exceed the authority to make them properly given, to the intent that where any such law would, but for this section, have been in excess of the authority so given shall nevertheless be a valid law to the extent to which it is not in excess of that authority.

Purpose of the Clause: 2.2

This provides for the priority of laws of the Northern Territory, giving the new Constitution (as well as the main federal constitutional documents) first priority as the fundamental law of the Northern Territory, with Organic laws second, Acts of the Parliament and previous Acts still in force third, subordinate legislation fourth, with common law and other sources of Northern Territory law (including Aboriginal customary law) equal next. This basically accords with the current priority of laws in the Northern Territory but gives the new Constitution a fundamental status, introduces a new category of Organic laws of special importance, and equates Aboriginal customary law with the common law.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See Discussion Paper No. 4, Recognition of Aboriginal Customary Law, 1992, as to the entrenched status of the new Constitution, and Information Paper No. 2, Entrenchment of a New State Constitution, 1989.

2.3 ORGANIC LAWS

(1) For the purposes of this Constitution, an Organic Law is a law of the Northern Territory -

(a) that is declared by this Constitution to be an Organic Law;

(b) that is an Act of Parliament which itself expressly states that it is an Organic Law.

(2) A Bill for an Act of Parliament that is expressly stated to be an Organic Law shall not when enacted take effect as an Organic Law unless -

(a) it was supported on its second and third readings by a division in each case in accordance with the Standing Rules and Orders of the Parliament with an affirmative vote equal to or more than a [to be left blank - refer to a NT Constitutional Convention] majority of the total number of members of the Parliament at the time of those respective divisions, and whether or not the Bill was amended;

(b) there was, a period of at least 2 calendar months between voting on its second reading and voting on its third reading;
(c) if the Bill was amended in Committee other than by way of minor drafting or consequential amendments, there was a period of at least 2 calendar months between voting on the last amendment to the Bill and voting on its third reading as amended; and

(d) there was an opportunity in its second reading for debate on its merits.

(3) the Parliament may in a Bill for an Organic Law or by a Bill to be enacted in the same manner as an Organic Law increase (but not decrease) the percentage of affirmative votes specified in section 2.3 (2) in respect of an Organic Law or class of Organic Laws, and when enacted in accordance with this section it has effect accordingly.

(4) The Speaker shall present to the Governor for assent an Organic Law passed in accordance with this section, and on doing so must certify to the Governor that the requirements of this section have been complied with.

(5) The certificate referred to in subsection (4) shall state -

(a) the date on which the votes on the second and third readings of the Bill were taken; and

(b) in relation to each vote -

(i) the total number of members of the Parliament at the time; and

(ii) the respective numbers of members of the Parliament voting for and against the proposal, and is, in the absence of proof to the contrary, conclusive evidence of the matters so stated.

(6) Nothing in this section prevents an Organic Law from -

(a) making any provision that might be made by an Act of the Parliament and which is expressly declared by that Organic Law as not being subject to the Organic Law procedures in this Constitution; or

(b) requiring any provision to be made by an Act of the Parliament that might otherwise be so made, but any such provision may be altered by the same majority that is required for any other Act of the Parliament;

Purpose of the Clause: 2.3
This introduces a new concept of Organic laws, having a superior constitutional status to ordinary Acts but less status than the Constitution itself. They will either be Organic laws declared by the new Constitution or Acts which are enacted by the Parliament in accordance with special procedures and declared to be Organic laws (e.g. the patriated Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act). Parliament will therefore decide which laws will become Organic by following this procedure. Subsequent amendments to Organic laws will be difficult to effect.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre-Statehood: No change.

Division 2 - Altering the Constitution and Organic Laws

[CLAUSES YET TO BE DRAFTED]

PART 3 - THE PARLIAMENT OF THE NORTHERN TERRITORY

Division 1 - Legislative Power

3.1 LEGISLATIVE POWER OF NORTHERN TERRITORY

(1) The legislative power of the Northern Territory is vested in the Parliament

(2) Subject to this Constitution, the Parliament has power, with the assent of the Governor as provided by this Constitution, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of the Northern Territory.
Purpose of the Clause: 3.1

3.1(1) Provides that the legislative power of the Northern Territory belongs to the new Parliament of the Northern Territory as the central democratic institution of the Northern Territory.

3.1(2) Provides that under the Constitution the new Northern Territory Parliament has power, after the Governor has assented, to make laws on all subjects relating to the Northern Territory, subject only to the new Constitution itself.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: For further information on the legislative power of the Parliament of the Northern Territory, see Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: p9.

3.2 ASSENT TO PROPOSED LAWS

(1) Every proposed law passed by the Parliament shall be presented to the Governor for assent.

(2) On the presentation of a proposed law to the Governor for assent, the Governor shall, subject to this section, declare that he or she -

(a) assents to the proposed law; or
(b) withholds assent to the proposed law.

(3) The Governor may return the proposed law to the Parliament with amendments that he or she recommends.

(4) The Parliament shall consider the amendments recommended by the Governor and the proposed law, with those or any other amendments, or without amendments, may be again presented to the Governor for assent, and subsection (2) applies accordingly.

Exposure Draft - Parts 1 to 7: A new Constitution for the Northern Territory and Tabling Statement

June 1995

6-27
Purpose of the Clause: 3.2

3.2(1) Provides that every proposed law passed by the Parliament has to be presented to the Governor for his assent, before it can become law.

3.2(2) Provides power to the Governor to give his or her assent to the proposed law or he or she can withhold assent. Under subsequent provisions, the decision to assent will normally be exercised in accordance with the advice of the responsible Northern Territory Ministers.

3.2(3) Provides power for the Governor to return the proposed law back to the Parliament with amendments to the proposed law that he or she recommends. Again, this will normally be exercised in accordance with advice from the Executive Council.

3.2(4) provides for the Parliament that in the event the Governor has returned a proposed law with amendments if any, it may consider the proposed law with amendments if any before again presenting the proposed law to the Governor for his or her assent. This is consequential on the previous provision.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers:

As to the power of assent to laws, see Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: p10.

3.3 PROPOSAL OF MONEY VOTES

An Act, vote, resolution or question, the effect of which is to dispose of or charge any revenues, loans or other moneys received by or on behalf of the Northern Territory, shall not be proposed in the Parliament unless the purpose for which such revenues, loans or other moneys are to be disposed of or charged by reason of the Act, vote, resolution or question has, in the same session, been recommended by message of the Governor to the Parliament.
Purpose of the Clause: 3.3
Provides for Parliament that it cannot in the same session of Parliament pass laws or pass resolutions on money matters relating to the disposal of those monies or charge any revenues, loans or other monies received by the Northern Territory unless recommended by the Governor in a message to the Parliament. This ensures that the initiation of financial proposals must come from the responsible Ministers only through their advice to the Governor.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

3.4 APPROPRIATION AND TAXATION LAWS NOT TO DEAL WITH SUBJECTS OTHER THAN THOSE FOR WHICH APPROPRIATION MADE OR TAXATION IMPOSED

(1) A proposed law which provides for the appropriation of revenue or moneys for the ordinary annual services of the Government shall deal only with such appropriation.

(2) Laws imposing taxation and proposed laws which provide for the appropriation of revenue or moneys for purposes other than the ordinary annual services of the Government shall deal with no matter other than the imposition and collection of that taxation and the purposes in relation to which it is imposed, or the subject in relation to which the revenue or moneys are to be appropriated, as the case may be.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.4
3.4 (1) Provides that when Parliament deals with a proposed law on revenue or for moneys for the ordinary annual services of the Government that the proposed law can only deal with that matter.

3.4 (2) Provides that when Parliament deals with a proposed law that imposes taxes or appropriates revenue or moneys for other purposes over and above the annual services of Government, it can only deal with that matter. Other matters can't be added.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change

3.5 POWERS, PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF PARLIAMENT

The power of the Parliament includes the power to make laws -

(a) declaring the powers, privileges and immunities of the Parliament and of its members, committees and officers; and

(b) providing for the manner in which powers, privileges and immunities so declared may be exercised or upheld.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.5

Provides for the Parliament to make laws as to the powers, privileges and immunities of Parliament and its officers, for example, how members of Parliament, Parliamentary Committee's and officers of the Parliament will conduct themselves in the course of every day business of Parliament.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Division 2 - Constitution and Membership of Parliament

3.6 THE PARLIAMENT

(1) There shall be a Parliament of the Northern Territory which shall consist of a single house.

(2) The Parliament shall be constituted by such numbers of members as prescribed by an Act.

(3) Subject to this Constitution, the members of the Parliament shall be directly elected as prescribed by an Act.
Purpose of the Clause: 3.6 - Sub-clauses (1) through to (3)

3.6 (1) Provides that there would be a new Parliament consisting of a single house.

3.6 (2) Provides for Parliament to pass legislation dealing with the number of members that Parliament will have.

3.6 (3) Provides for Parliament to make general electoral laws.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.6 - Sub-clauses (4) and (5)

3.6 (4) & (5) Provides for the nature of the electorates for the Parliament.

Three alternatives are offered —

Alternative 1 - Constitutionally this will require single member electorates of approximately equal numbers of electors;

Alternative 2 - Constitutionally this gives Parliament the option of single or multi member electorates (or a combination), but still with approximately equal numbers of electors per member;

Alternative 3 - Constitutionally this will require multi member electorates with an equal number of members in each, but still with approximately equal numbers of electors per member.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre-Statehood: No change.

(6) A member of the Parliament shall, before taking his or her seat, make and subscribe an oath or affirmation of allegiance in the form in Schedule 2 and also an oath or affirmation of office in the form in Schedule 3.

(7) An oath or affirmation under subsection (6) shall be made before the Governor or a person authorised by the Governor to administer it.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.6 (6) and (7)

Provides that members of the Parliament will make an oath or affirmation of allegiance before the Governor or a person authorised by the Governor to administer it.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre-Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: No reference.

3.7 QUALIFICATIONS OF ELECTORS

All persons who are, under a law of the Commonwealth, qualified to vote at an election of a member of the House of Representatives of the Parliament of the Commonwealth for the Northern Territory and who have resided in the Northern Territory for not less than 3 calendar months immediately before the polling day of the election, are qualified to vote at an election of members of the Parliament.
3.7 VOTING AT ELECTIONS

Each person qualified to vote at an election of members of the Parliament is entitled to vote only once and the method of voting shall, as far as practicable, be by secret ballot as prescribed by an Act.

3.8 WRITS FOR ELECTIONS

Writs for the election of members of the Parliament shall be issued by the Governor on the advice of the Executive Council or the Premier.
3.9 Purpose of the Clause:

Provides for the Governor acting on the advice of the Executive Council or the Premier to issue writs for election of members of the Parliament.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: In relation to the issue of electoral writs, the general proposal is that the Governor acts in accordance with the advice of his or her Ministers - see Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: pp34, 53.

3.10 TERM OF OFFICE OF MEMBER

Subject to this Constitution, the term of office of a member of the Parliament commences on the date of his or her election and ends immediately before the date of the next general election of members of the Parliament.

Purpose of the Clause:

Provides for the term of office of a member of Parliament commences on the date of his or her election and the term of office will cease immediately before the date of the next general election.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

3.11 DATE OF ELECTIONS

(1) Subject to this Constitution, a general election of members of Parliament shall be held on a date determined by the Governor on the advice of the Executive Council or the Premier.
Purpose of the Clause: 3.11 (1)
Provides the general rule that an election to the new Parliament shall be held on a date determined by the Governor on the advice of the Executive Council or Premier.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change

Purpose of the Clause: 3.11 - Sub-clauses (2) through to (4)

There are 3 options for consideration that provides for the term of office of the new Parliament:

Alternative 1 - Constitutionally, this would allow a maximum 4 year term subject to early dissolution such that a general election can be called by the Governor at any time;

Alternative 2 - Constitutionally this will allow a maximum 4 year term, but will require the Parliament to sit for at least a 3 year fixed term (which cannot be terminated earlier except in limited circumstance, see below);

Alternative 3 - Constitutionally this will require a 4 year fixed term of the Parliament.

(6) No provision.

(6) Subject to subsection (5), the Governor may also dissolve the Parliament at any time after the expiration of the period of 3 years referred to in subsection (4), but only on the advice of the Executive Council or the Premier and not otherwise.

(6) No provision.
Purpose of the Clause: 3.11 - Sub-clauses (5) and (6)

This specifies for the limited circumstances in which the Governor may appoint a new Premier or dissolve the Parliament otherwise than in accordance with the advice of the existing responsible Ministers. In other circumstances, the Governor will normally follow the advice of those responsible Ministers (see below). Three alternatives are provided, depending on whether the term of office is a maximum 4 year term, a 4 year term with a partially fixed term of 3 years, or a fixed 4 year term. In the case of the second alternative, a subclause (6) is also required in relation to dissolution in the last year of the 4 year term.

3.12 RESIGNATION OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

A member of the Parliament may resign office by writing signed by the member and delivered to the Speaker or, if there is no Speaker or the Speaker is absent from the Northern Territory, to the Governor, and on the receipt of the resignation by the Speaker or the Governor, as the case may be, the office of the member becomes vacant.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.12

Provides for a member of the Parliament to resign from Parliament and that the resignation will be in writing and signed by the member. The resignation is to be delivered to the Speaker and if there is no Speaker or the Speaker is absent, be delivered to the Governor. When the member so resigns, the position of the office of the member becomes vacant.

</table>

Purpose of the Clause: 3.13

Alternative 1 - This provides for a by election for a casual vacancy under a single member electorate provision.

(Alternatives 2 & 3 - single/multi member electorates or equal multi member electorates)

A different clause for by-elections for casual vacancies is required where there are multi-member electorates. This leaves the method to be prescribed by an Act of the Parliament as the method will depend upon the exact nature of the multi-member electorate system chosen.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

3.14 QUALIFICATIONS FOR ELECTION

Subject to this Constitution a person is qualified to be a candidate for election as a member of the Parliament if, at the date of nomination, the person -

(a) is an Australian citizen;
(b) has attained the age of 18 years;
(c) is entitled, or qualified to become entitled, to vote at elections of members of the Parliament; and
(d) has been resident in the Northern Territory for not less than 6 calendar months.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.14
Provides for qualifications for persons who want to nominate as a candidate for elections as a member of the new Parliament. He or she has to be an Australian citizen, must be 18 years or over, must be entitled or qualified to vote at elections of members of the Parliament and must have been a resident in the Northern Territory for not less than 6 calendar months.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

3.15 DISQUALIFICATIONS FOR MEMBERSHIP OF PARLIAMENT

(1) A person is not qualified to be a candidate for election as a member of the Parliament if, at the date of nomination -

(a) the person -
   (i) is a member of either house of the Federal Parliament or of a State or Territory legislature (by whatever name called) of another State or Territory of the Commonwealth;
   (ii) is the Governor-General, Administrator or head of government of the Commonwealth or the Governor, Administrator or head of government of a State or Territory of the Commonwealth; or
   (iii) holds office, of whatever tenure, as a judge under a law of the Commonwealth or of a State or Territory of the Commonwealth;

(b) the person -
   (i) holds an office or appointment, prescribed for the purpose of this section by an Act, under a law of the Commonwealth or a State or Territory of the Commonwealth; or
(ii) not being the holder of such an office or appointment, is employed by the Commonwealth, by a State or Territory of the Commonwealth or by a body corporate established for a public purpose by such a law, and prescribed for the purposes of this section by an Act, and he or she is entitled to any remuneration or allowance (other than reimbursement of expenses reasonably incurred) in respect of that employment;

(c) the person is an undischarged bankrupt; or

(d) the person has been convicted and is under sentence of imprisonment (including while on parole or under a suspended sentence) for one year or longer for an offence against the law of the Commonwealth or of a State or Territory of the Commonwealth.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.15 (1)

Provides for the criteria for persons who are disqualified from being a candidate for a member of the Parliament at the date of nominations.

A person cannot stand if -

(a) he or she is a member of Parliament of a State or the Commonwealth;

(b) is the Governor General of Australia, the Administrator or Governor of a State or Territory;

(c) holds office as a judge under any law of the Commonwealth, State or Territory;

(d) holds any public office that is prescribed by an Act of the new Parliament or otherwise is employed on remuneration by any public employer as prescribed by an Act of the new Parliament.;

(e) is an undischarged bankrupt; or

(f) has been convicted under any law of the Commonwealth, State or Territory and is under sentence of imprisonment (including while on parole or a suspended sentence) for one year or longer.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

(2) A person elected as a member of the Parliament who, immediately before being so elected -

(a) held an office or appointment (other than an office or appointment prescribed for the purposes of this section by an Act) under a law of the Northern Territory; or

(b) not being the holder of an office or appointment under such a law, was employed by the Northern Territory or by a body corporate established for a public purpose by an Act (other than employment prescribed for the purposes of this section by an Act),

---

Exposure Draft - Parts 1 to 7: June 1995
A new Constitution for the Northern Territory and Tabling Statement and who was entitled to any remuneration or allowance (other than reimbursement of expenses reasonably incurred) in respect of that office, appointment or employment, ceases, by force of this subsection, to hold such office, appointment or employment on being so elected.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.15 (2)

Provides that a person elected to the new Parliament who previously held an Northern Territory office or appointment or was employed by the Northern Territory, other than an office, appointment or employment prescribed under clause 3.15(1), automatically ceases to hold same upon election to the new Parliament. This will enable the person to nominate and campaign, but continue to hold the existing office, appointment or employment if not elected.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

(3) A member of the Parliament vacates office if he or she -

(a) becomes a person to whom any of the paragraphs of subsection (1) applies;

(b) ceases to be an Australian citizen;

(c) without the permission of the Parliament, fails to attend the Parliament for 7 consecutive sitting days of the Parliament;

(d) ceases to be entitled, or qualified to become entitled, to vote at elections of members of the Parliament; or

(e) takes or agrees to take, directly or indirectly, any remuneration, allowance or honorarium for services rendered in the Parliament, otherwise than in accordance with, or honestly believing it to be in accordance with, an Act that provides for remuneration and allowances to be paid to persons in respect of their services as members of the Parliament, members of the Executive Council or Ministers of the Northern Territory.
Purpose of the Clause: 3.15 (3)

Provides for the vacating of the office of a member of the new Parliament if a person is disqualified from the office in accordance with section 3.15(1), ceases to be an Australian citizen, has failed to attend Parliament without seeking leave for 7 consecutive days, ceases to be entitled or qualified to be entitled to vote at election of members of the Parliament; or takes or agrees to take, directly or indirectly any remuneration or allowance or honorarium for services, not entitled under law, to that person as a member of the Parliament.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Division 3 - Procedure of Parliament

3.16 SESSIONS OF PARLIAMENT

(1) Subject to this section, the Governor may, by notice in the Gazette, appoint such times for holding the sessions of the Parliament as he or she thinks fit and may also, from time to time, in like manner, prorogue the Parliament.

(2) At the written request of a majority of members of the Parliament, the Governor shall, by notice in the Gazette, appoint a time, being not later than 14 days after the day on which he or she receives the request, for holding a session of the Parliament.

(3) The first sittings of the Parliament shall be commenced within 6 months after the declaration of the polls after a general election of members of the Parliament and thereafter shall be held not later than 6 months after the last day of the previous sittings.
Purpose of the Clause: 3.16

3.16 (1) Provides for the Governor to appoint such times for holding the sessions of Parliament and may from time to time terminate the session by prorogation without dissolving the Parliament.

3.16 (2) Provides for the majority of members of the Parliament to request the Governor to appoint a time, being no later than 14 days after the day on which he or she receives the request, for holding a session of the Parliament.

3.16 (3) Provides for sittings of the Parliament shall commence within 6 months after the declaration of the polls after a general election and within 6 months after the last day of the previous sittings.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

As to (3) see Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: pp24-25, 38.

3.17 QUORUM

(1) The quorum for a sitting of the Parliament is one third of the number of seats in the Parliament at the time.

(2) The Standing Rules and Orders of the Parliament shall make provision for the action to be taken in the event of a lack of or loss of a quorum at any time.

Purpose of the Clause: 3.17

Provides for the minimum number of members that are to be present in order for Parliament to validly conduct business and the Standing Rules and Orders of the Parliament will make provision in the event where there is not the sufficient number of members to form a quorum.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: No discussion, but see Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: p.35.
3.18  THE SPEAKER

(1) The Parliament shall, before proceeding to the dispatch of any other business, choose a member of the Parliament to be the Speaker of the Parliament and, as often as the office of Speaker becomes vacant, the Parliament shall again choose a member to be the Speaker.

(2) The Speaker continues to hold office until -

(a) the Parliament first meets after a general election of members of the Parliament that takes place after he or she is chosen Speaker under subsection (1);

(b) he or she resigns office by writing signed by him or her delivered to the Governor;

(c) he or she ceases to be a member of the Parliament otherwise than by reason of the dissolution of the Parliament; or

(d) he or she is removed from office by the Parliament, whichever first occurs.

(3) The Speaker has such functions, powers and privileges as are imposed or conferred on him or her by or under a law of the Territory.

“Law of the Territory” will be defined to include this Constitution, an Organic Law, an Act, subordinate legislation and the common law applicable in the Territory.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

3.19  ACTING SPEAKER

The Standing Rules and Orders of the Parliament may provide for the appointment of an Acting Speaker and for a further Acting Speaker in place of the Acting Speaker, and for all matters incidental to such an appointment.
3.19  Purpose of the Clause:  Provides that the Standing Rules and Orders of the Parliament will make provision for the appointment or otherwise of an Acting Speaker.

Variations:
(a) Republic:  No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood:  No change.

3.20  VOTING IN PARLIAMENT

(1) Subject to this Constitution, questions arising in the Parliament shall be determined by a majority of votes.

(2) The Speaker or other member presiding at a meeting of the Parliament or of a Committee of the Parliament is, in all cases, entitled to vote and shall also, where there is an equality of votes on a question, have a casting vote.

Purpose of the Clause:  Provides that under this Constitution questions that arise in the Parliament will be determined by a majority of votes.

Variations:
(a) Republic:  No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood:  No change.

3.21  VALIDATION OF ACTS OF PARLIAMENT

Where a person who has, whether before or after the commencement of this Constitution, purported to sit or vote as a member of the Parliament at a meeting of the Parliament or of a Committee of the Parliament -

(a) was not a duly elected member by reason of his or her not having been qualified for election or of any other defect in the election of the person; or

(b) had vacated office as a member, all things done or purporting to have been done by the Parliament or that Committee shall be deemed to be as validly done as if the person had, when so sitting or voting, been a duly elected member of the Parliament or had not vacated office, as the case may be.

Purpose of the Clauses: 3.21
Provides that all actions by the Parliament, whether or not any member was duly elected by reason of his or her not being qualified for elections or has vacated his or her position as a member of Parliament, will be deemed as valid action as if that person had been duly elected as a member of the Parliament or had not vacated office.

3.22 MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

(1) The Parliament shall cause minutes of its proceedings to be kept.

(2) A copy of minutes kept under subsection (1) shall, on request made by any person, be made available for inspection by the person or, on payment of such fee, if any, as is fixed by or under an Act, be supplied to the person.

Purpose of the Clauses: 3.22
Provides that all proceeding of the Parliament will be minuted.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: No discussion, but see Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: p.35.

3.23 STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

The Parliament may make Standing Rules and Orders, not inconsistent with a law of the Northern Territory, relating to the order and conduct of its business and proceedings.
PART 4 - THE EXECUTIVE

4.1 EXTENT OF EXECUTIVE POWER

The duties, powers, functions and authorities of the Governor, the Executive Council and the Ministers of the Northern Territory imposed or conferred by or under this Part extend to the execution and maintenance of this Constitution and the laws of the Northern Territory and to the exercise of the prerogatives of the Crown so far as they relate to those duties, powers, functions and authorities.

Purpose of the Clause: 4.1

This clause establishes the extent of the executive power of the Northern Territory Government under the new Constitution. It provides for the powers, duties and functions of the Governor, the Executive Council and Ministers of the Northern Territory to extend to the execution and maintenance of the new Constitution and the laws of the Northern Territory, including the prerogatives of the Crown applicable to the Northern Territory.

Variations:

(a) Republic: The reference to prerogatives of the Crown will have to be changed to a reference to those powers, etc., that were previously comprehended within the prerogatives of the Crown. The draft assumes that the title "Governor" will be used, whether or not the Territory has a republican system, in a similar manner to the State Governors of the USA.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: In regard to the power of the Executive, see Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: Parts F & G.
4.2 GOVERNOR

(1) There shall be a Governor of the Northern Territory who shall be appointed by Her Majesty on the advice of the Premier and who shall hold office during Her Majesty's pleasure.

(2) Subject to this Constitution, the Governor is charged with the duty of -

(a) upholding and maintaining this Constitution; and

(b) administering the government of the Northern Territory.

(3) Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Constitution or an Act, or where, in the Governor's opinion, to so act would be contrary to his or her duty under subsection (2)(a), the Governor shall act, in administering the government of the Northern Territory, only in accordance with the advice of the Executive Council.

(4) If the Governor acts in or purportedly in administering the government of the Northern Territory otherwise than in accordance with the advice of the Executive Council or a Minister of the Northern Territory duly given, he or she shall, on the first sitting day of the Parliament after so acting, cause to be tabled in the Parliament a written statement of his or her reasons for so acting.
Purpose of the Clause: 4.2

This establishes the new office of Governor to replace the Administrator under the Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978. It assumes that this change will be associated with a grant of statehood.

4.2 (1) Provides for the office of Governor for the Northern Territory, appointed by Her Majesty (the Queen of Australia) on the advice of the Premier in accordance with the provisions of the Australia Act 1986 and will hold office during Her Majesty's pleasure.

4.2 (2) Provides for duties of the Governor to uphold and maintain the provisions of this Constitution and to administer the government of the Northern Territory as the Head of State for the Northern Territory representing the Queen, in the same manner as a State Governor.

4.2 (3) Provides for the Governor to fulfil his or her duties in administering the government of the Northern Territory in accordance with advice of the Executive Council except as otherwise expressly provided for under this Constitution, an Organic Law, an Act of the Parliament or where it would not uphold and maintain the new Constitution. Thus the convention that the Governor acts on the advice of his/her responsible Ministers is elevated to a constitutional rule except in limited circumstances.

4.2 (4) Provides for the Governor to give reasons to Parliament if he or she has acted or has claimed to have acted contrary to the advice of the Executive Council or of a Minister of the Northern Territory and that a written statement detailing the reasons for the action taken be tabled in the Parliament.

Variations:

(a) Republic: If Australia (including the Northern Territory) is a Republic, the appointment of the Head of State by the Queen will need to be replaced by some other method of appointment or election.

(b) Pre—Statehood: If the new Constitution is to come into operation before a grant of Statehood, it may be necessary to continue the present method of appointment by the Governor General, to be replaced by appointment by the Queen from the grant of Statehood.

4.3 REMUNERATION AND OTHER TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF GOVERNOR

The Governor shall be paid out of the Public Account of the Northern Territory such remuneration, and shall be engaged on such terms and conditions, as fixed by or under an Act. which remuneration, terms and conditions shall not be reduced while the Governor continues in office.

Purpose of the Clause: 4.3

Provides for the remuneration, terms and conditions of the Governor to be fixed by an Act of Parliament and not to be reduced during any term of office.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: p49.

4.4 ACTING GOVERNOR

(1) The Parliament may, by resolution, appoint one or more persons to act in the office of Governor and to administer the government of the Northern Territory during any vacancy in the office of Governor or whenever the Governor is absent from duty or from the Northern Territory or is, for any other reason, unable to exercise and perform the powers and functions of office.

(2) An appointment of a person under subsection (1) may be expressed to have effect only in such circumstances as are specified in the resolution of the Parliament.

(3) An Acting Governor administering the government of the Northern Territory has, and may exercise and perform, all the powers and functions of the Governor.

(4) The exercise of a power or performance of a function by an Acting Governor during the absence of the Governor from the Northern Territory does not prevent the exercise of any of those powers or the performance of any of those functions by the Governor.

(5) The appointment of an Acting Governor, and any act done by a person purporting to act under this section, shall not be called in question on the grounds that the occasion for his or her so acting had not arisen or had ceased.
Purpose of the Clause: 4.4

4.4 (1) Provides for Parliament by resolution to appoint one or more persons to be Acting Governor, during any vacancy in the office of Governor or the Governor is absent from duty, or for any reason is unable to perform the powers and functions of that office.

4.4 (2) Provides for the appointment of Acting Governor can only be effected in accordance with the resolution made by Parliament.

4.4 (3) Provides for powers and functions of the Acting Governor to exercise all the powers and functions of the Governor.

4.4 (4) Provides for the Governor to exercise his powers and functions, when he or she is absent, even though there is an Acting Governor.

4.4 (5) Provides for any action done by the appointment of Acting Governor cannot be called into question on the grounds that the occasion for his or her so acting had not arisen or the action had ceased.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: No discussion.

4.5 EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

(1) There shall be an Executive Council of the Northern Territory to advise the Governor in the government of the Northern Territory.

(2) The Executive Council shall consist of the persons for the time being holding Ministerial office.

(3) The Governor or his or her nominee is entitled to attend all meetings of the Executive Council, and shall preside at all meetings at which he or she is present.

(4) The Governor may introduce into the Executive Council any matter for discussion in the Council.

(5) The Governor may convene such meetings of the Executive Council as he or she thinks necessary but shall convene a meeting when requested by the Premier or acting Premier to do so.

(6) A meeting of the Executive Council shall not be convened otherwise than by the Governor.

(7) Subject to the preceding provisions of this section, the procedure of the Executive Council shall be as the Council determines.
Purpose of the Clause: 4.5
4.5 (1) Provides for the establishment of the Executive Council to advise the Governor of the Northern Territory.
4.5 (2) Provides for membership of the Executive Council will comprise of members of Parliament who hold the office of Minister for the Northern Territory.
4.5 (3) Provides for the Governor or his or her nominee to attend all meetings of the Executive Council and that the Governor or his or her nominee will preside at all meetings at which he or she is present.
4.5 (4) Provides for the Governor to introduce into a meeting of the Executive Council any matter for discussion.
4.5 (5) Provides for the Governor to call meetings of the Executive Council, but he or she must call a meeting of the Executive Council when requested by the Premier or Acting Premier.
4.5 (6) Provides for the Governor to be the only person who can convene a meeting of the Executive Council.
4.5 (7) Provides for the Executive Council to determine its own rules and procedures in conducting its meetings.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre-Statehood: No change.

4.6 MINISTERIAL OFFICE

There shall be such number of offices of Minister of the Northern Territory, having such respective designations, as the Governor, acting on the advice of the Premier, from time to time determines.

Purpose of the Clause: 4.6
Provides for the Governor, acting on the advice of the Premier, to determine from time to time the number of offices and designations of Minister of the Northern Territory.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre-Statehood: No change.

4.7 APPOINTMENT OF MINISTERS

(1) The Governor shall, from time to time, appoint as the Premier of the Northern Territory the member of the Parliament who, in the Governor’s sole opinion, commands or is likely to command the general support of the majority of members of the Parliament on any matter.

(2) If a vote of no confidence in the Government has been carried in the Parliament by a majority of its members present and voting and the Governor considers that there is another member of the Parliament who commands or is likely to command the general support of the majority of the members of the Parliament on any matter, the Governor may terminate the appointment of the Premier, and may do so without the need to refer the matter to or act on the advice of the Executive Council or the Premier.

(3) Subject to this Part, the Governor may, on the recommendation of the Premier -

(a) appoint a member of the Parliament to a Ministerial Office; and

(b) at any time, terminate the appointment.

Purpose of the Clause: 4.7

4.7 (1) Provides for the Governor to appoint as Premier of the Northern Territory the member of the Parliament who in his or her sole opinion commands or is likely to command the general support of the majority of the members of the Parliament. Thus the Premier must be the person having the confidence of a majority of the Parliament to be the leader of the Government.

4.7 (2) When read with Clause 4.7(1), provides that where there is a vote of no confidence by the Parliament in the Government, the Governor may appoint another member of the Parliament who commands or is likely to command the general support of the majority of the members of the Parliament, to be Premier, and that the Governor can terminate the appointment of the existing Premier, without having to refer the matter to or act on the advice of the Executive Council or the Premier.

4.7 (3) Provides for the Governor on the recommendation of the Premier to appoint and terminate, at any time, a member of the Parliament to be a Minister of the Northern Territory.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

4.8 TENURE OF OFFICE

The appointment of a person to a Ministerial Office takes effect on the day specified in the instrument of appointment and terminates when -
(a) he or she ceases, by reason of his or her resignation or by reason of the provisions of section 3.15, to be a member of the Parliament;

(b) his or her appointment is terminated under section 4.7 (3) by the Governor;

(c) he or she resigns office by writing signed by him or her delivered to the Governor and the resignation is accepted by the Governor; or

(d) the first sittings of the Parliament after a general election of the Parliament that takes place after the appointment takes effect, where the Minister is not re-elected as a member.

Purpose of the Clause: 4.8

Provides for the tenure of office for a member of the Parliament who is a Minister and for the cessation of that tenure, governed by the following:

(a) if he or she ceases to be a member of Parliament or has resigned;

(b) if his or her appointment has been terminated by the Governor;

(c) if he or she resigns in writing to the Governor and the resignation is accepted; or

(d) where he or she has not be re-elected as a member of Parliament after a general election of the Parliament.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

4.9 OATH TO BE TAKEN BY MEMBERS OF EXECUTIVE COUNCIL AND MINISTERS

(1) A member of the Executive Council shall, before entering on the duties of the member's office, make and subscribe an oath or affirmation in accordance with the form in Schedule 1.

(2) A person who is appointed to a Ministerial Office shall, before entering on the duties of the office, make and subscribe an oath or affirmation in accordance with the form in Schedule 2.

(3) An oath or affirmation under subsection (1) or (2) shall be made before the Governor or a person authorised by the Governor to administer such oaths or affirmations.
PART 5 - FINANCE

5.1 INTERPRETATION

In this Part "public moneys of the Northern Territory" means the revenues, loans and other moneys receive by or on behalf of the Northern Territory.

5.2 PUBLIC MONEYS

(1) The public moneys of the Northern Territory shall be available to defray the expenditure of the Northern Territory.

(2) The receipt, expenditure and control of public moneys of the Northern Territory shall be regulated as provided by an Act.
5.2 PURPOSE OF THE CLAUSE:

Provides that all money of the Northern Territory received and expended will be regulated by legislation passed by the Parliament and those moneys received will be available to defray the expenditure of the Northern Territory.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

5.3 WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC MONEYS

(1) No public moneys of the Northern Territory shall be issued or expended except as authorised by an Act.

(2) The public moneys of the Northern Territory may be invested in such manner as provide by or under an Act.

Purpose of the Clause: 5.3

Provides that the use of public moneys is to be regulated by legislation passed by the Parliament.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

PART 5 - THE JUDICIARY

6.1 JUDICIAL POWER OF COURTS

(1) The judicial power of the Northern Territory shall be vested in a superior court to be called the Supreme Court of the Northern Territory (including that Court exercising its jurisdiction as the Court of Appeal and the Court of Criminal Appeal) and in such other courts as the Parliament establishes by an Act.

(2) The Supreme Court of the Northern Territory shall consist of a Chief Justice and such other Judges and officers as prescribed by an Act.
Purpose of the Clause: 6.1 - Sub-clauses (1) and (2)

6.1 (1) Provides that the judicial power of the Northern Territory shall reside in the Supreme Court of the Northern Territory, including the Supreme Court as the Court of Appeal or the Court of Criminal Appeal and in other courts established by the Parliament in legislation passed by the Parliament.

6.1 (2) Provides that the Supreme Court of the Northern Territory will consist of a Chief Justice and other judges and officers of the Court as prescribed in legislation passed by the Parliament.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: Parts N & O.

(3) The Supreme Court (including in its appellate jurisdiction both civil and criminal in relation to appeals from another court) shall be a court of general jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters relating to the Northern Territory, including as to matters arising under this Constitution or involving its interpretation and, without limitation, its jurisdiction and that of other courts established in pursuance of subsection (1) is as prescribed by an Act or by an Act of the Commonwealth or of a State or Territory of the Commonwealth.

Purpose of the Clause: 6.1 (3)

Provides that the Supreme Court of the Northern Territory will be a court of general jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters relating to the Northern Territory, including matters involving the interpretation of this Constitution, and that jurisdiction may be conferred on the Territory courts by legislation of the Northern Territory, the Commonwealth and a State.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: Part O.

(4) The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under section (3) extends to an advisory jurisdiction in matters arising under this Constitution or involving its interpretation but only at the instance of the Governor in his or her sole discretion, the Speaker of the Parliament on the resolution of Parliament, the Executive Council or the Premier.
Purpose of the Clause: 6.1 (4)

Provides an extension of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the Northern Territory to advise on matters arising under this Constitution or involving its interpretation. It can only do so when matters are submitted to the Court by the Governor in his or her discretion, the Speaker of the Parliament on the resolution of Parliament, the Executive Council or the Premier. Thus in controversial constitutional issues, for example, there will be power for the Supreme Court in open court, if necessary on an urgent application, to rule on the constitutionality of a proposed Governmental course of action before it is taken.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: No discussion, but note the duty of the Governor to maintain the new Constitution - see Discussion Paper on A Proposed New Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: p54. Thus the Governor and others specified will be able to seek the advice of the Supreme Court in public sittings before any decision by the Government is taken to act in a way that might be unconstitutional.

6.2 APPOINTMENT, REMOVAL AND REMUNERATION OF JUDGES OF THE SUPREME COURT

(1) The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall be appointed by the Governor in accordance with the advice of the Executive Council, after consultation with such bodies representing the legal profession in the Northern Territory as the Governor thinks fit.

(2) The Judges of the Supreme Court other than the Chief Justice shall be appointed by the Governor in accordance with the advice of the Executive Council, after consultation with the Chief Justice and such bodies representing the legal profession in the Northern Territory as the Governor thinks fit.

(3) A Judge of the Supreme Court shall not be removed from office except by the Governor on an address from the Parliament praying for the Judge’s removal on the grounds of proved misbehaviour or incapacity.

(4) A Judge of the Supreme Court shall retire from office at the age of 70 years, or such greater age as is prescribed by an Act.

(5) Judges of the Supreme Court and the members of other courts established in pursuance of section 6.1(1) shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Account of the Northern Territory such remuneration, and be employed on such terms and conditions, as provided by or under an Act.
(6) The remuneration or terms or conditions of appointment of a Judge shall not be reduced while the Judge continues in office.

6.3 DOCTRINE OF SEPARATION OF POWERS

Nothing in this Constitution prevents the passing by the Parliament of an Act -

(a) conferring judicial authority on a person or body outside the Judiciary; or
(b) providing for the establishment by or in accordance with an Act, or by the consent of the parties, of arbitral, conciliatory or other tribunals, whether ad hoc or otherwise, outside the Judiciary, on such terms and conditions as the Parliament thinks fit.

Purpose of the Clause: 6.3
Provides for the Parliament, on such terms and conditions it thinks fit, to confer judicial authority on a person or bodies outside the Judiciary and for the establishment, whether by legislation or by consent of parties of arbitral, conciliation or other tribunals, whether ad hoc or otherwise, outside the Judiciary. Thus the strict separation of powers doctrine, not applicable in the States, will also not be applicable in the Northern Territory to prevent the exercise of judicial power by specialised tribunals established by legislation. However, this will not affect the independence of the Supreme Court under the preceding provision.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No change.

PART 7 - ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

7.1 PROTECTION OF ABORIGINAL LAND RIGHTS

(1) Subject to this Constitution, an Organic law shall be enacted by the Parliament entitled the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act which shall contain provisions based on those contained in the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act 1976 of the Commonwealth as in force immediately before the commencement of this Constitution, but with variations to give effect to that Act as a law of the Northern Territory and with such other variations as are determined by the Parliament, being in either case variations in a form agreed to by the Commonwealth.

(2) Upon the enactment of an Organic law in accordance with subsection (1), that Organic law may only be amended by a further Organic law in accordance with section [amendment procedures yet to be determined], and the affirmative votes required for such an amendment under that section shall be equal to or more than ([alternative 1-twothirds] or [alternative 2 - three-quarter].

(3) Notwithstanding anything in the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act as an Organic law, an estate or interest in freehold in Aboriginal land shall not be capable of being sold, assigned, mortgaged, charged, surrendered, extinguished, or otherwise disposed of unless a court or body established by an Organic law is first satisfied after enquiry that all Aborigines having an estate or interest in that land, being of full legal capacity, have been adequately informed of, and a majority of them have voluntarily consented to, the proposed transaction and that the proposed transaction is otherwise in the interests of all Aborigines having an estate or interest in, or residing on, that land.

(4) An Organic law shall provide that the court or body referred to in subsection (3) shall comprise or include in its membership a judge of the Supreme Court of the Northern Territory and that it shall have power to conduct such enquiries as it considers necessary and to issue a summons for the attendance of witnesses and/or for the production of documents.

(5) Notwithstanding anything in the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act as an Organic law, but subject to subsection (6), Aboriginal land shall not be resumed, compulsorily acquired or forfeited by or under a law of the Northern Territory,

(6) An Organic law may provide for the compulsory acquisition of an estate or interest in all or any part of Aboriginal land where that estate or interest is less than a freehold estate or interest, providing that the acquisition is on just terms and for or in furtherance of any purpose which is for the benefit of the public (other than as a park) and whether or not that purpose is to be effected by the Northern Territory or by any other person or body, and otherwise upon terms and conditions not less favourable than for the compulsory acquisition of other land under a law of the Northern Territory.

(7) Where an estate or interest in all or any part of Aboriginal land is compulsorily acquired under subsection(6), then upon the permanent cessation of the use of that acquired land for or in furtherance of any purpose which is for the benefit of the public (and whether it is the original purpose or otherwise), and if the land is still Aboriginal land, the estate or interest so acquired shall cease.

(8) An Organic law may declare that any other law of the Northern Territory is capable of operating concurrently with the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act as an Organic law, and upon such a declaration, those laws shall be interpreted and applied accordingly.
Purpose of the Clause 7.1

Provides for the patriation of the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act 1976 of the Commonwealth to the Northern Territory as a law of the Northern Territory in the form as at the commencement of the new Constitution, with such variations as are agreed with the Commonwealth. Thereafter the patriotied Act can only be amended by a further Organic law passed in accordance with the restricted procedures in the new Constitution, but with a special majority requirement for which two alternatives are offered - two-thirds of all the members of the Parliament or three quarters of all those members. Even then, specific features of Aboriginal land rights are to be entrenched in the Constitution, beyond amendment even by an Organic law. These constitutional guarantees will prevent any disposal of the freehold in Aboriginal land once granted without a prior independent enquiry with a Supreme Court Judge, to make sure that all Aborigines with an interest are informed, that a majority of them have voluntarily consented and that any such disposal is in the interests of the Aboriginals concerned. Otherwise the land must remain freehold Aboriginal land, although the existing provisions for disposal of lesser interests than freehold will remain. All compulsory acquisition of Aboriginal land will be excluded by the Constitution, except that the acquisition of interests less than freehold for a purpose benefiting the public will be permitted on just terms and on limited conditions. There will be power by an Organic law to declare specific laws of the Northern Territory as capable of operating concurrently with the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act, thus removing current doubts in such matters as local government.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No change
(b) Pre--Statehood: No change

7.2 PROTECTION OF ABORIGINAL SACRED SITES

An Organic law shall provide for the protection of, and the prevention of the desecration to, sacred sites in the Northern Territory, including sacred sites on Aboriginal land, and in particular it shall regulate or authorise the entry of persons on those sites, and that Organic law shall provide for the right of Aborigines to have access to those sites in accordance with Aboriginal tradition and shall take into account the wishes of Aborigines relating to the extent to which those sites should be protected.
Purpose of the Clause 7.2

This clause, based on a provision of the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act of the Commonwealth, will place the constitutional obligation on the new Parliament to have in place on an ongoing basis legislation by way of an Organic law to protect and prevent desecration to sacred sites in the Northern Territory. In relation to that legislation, there will be a constitutional guarantee that Aboriginal traditional access to sacred sites will be preserved and their wishes will be taken into account. A transitional provision in the new Constitution could declare that the existing Territory legislation on sacred sites is an Organic law.

(a) Republic: No change
(b) Pre-Statehood: No change

Additional Provisions to the Exposure Draft on a new Constitution
for the Northern Territory

November 1995
INTRODUCTION

The Northern Territory Legislative Assembly Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development, formerly a Select Committee, in responses to its terms of reference, has been working for some years on matters that could be dealt with in a new constitution for the Northern Territory.

The Committee has been proceeding with the preparation of a draft constitution in the light of the various submissions and comments made to it.

On 22 June an Exposure Draft on Parts 1 to 7 on a new Constitution for the Northern Territory was tabled in the Legislative Assembly. That Exposure Draft encapsulated the main elements of a proposed constitution for the Northern Territory.

Since that time, the Committee has proceeded in formulating additional provisions to that Exposure Draft and this document now includes some of the essential elements not canvassed in the earlier document. The additional provisions include the following:

- the amendment procedures to the Constitution and Organic laws;
- the establishment of a Standing Committee on the Constitution and Organic Laws;
- the constitutional recognition of the diverse peoples that make up the Northern Territory in respect of their language, social, cultural and religious matters; including
- the recognition of Aboriginal people of the Northern Territory to be self-determining in exercising control over all facets of their daily lives; and
- the constitutional recognition of the system of local government, including its role and function as a local governing body.

This document does not include provisions relating to the transitional arrangements and definitions, apart from defining 'Aboriginal self-determination'. Other matters may yet be included.

The format of the additional provisions follows that of the earlier document, that is, they are annotated with an explanation of each clause, with variations that would be required in the event that a republican system of government was to be adopted, and if the constitution was to be brought into operation before any grant of Statehood to the Territory. Cross references to the Committee's issued papers are also included for ease of reference.

The additional provisions canvassed in this document do not represent the final views of the Committee, however, the document is issued for the purpose of receiving public comment and submissions before the Committee settles the draft constitution and finally reports to the Legislative Assembly.

Following final report to the Legislative Assembly, the further procedure for adoption of the Constitution previously, outlined in the Committee's issued papers are envisaged. These include a Territory Constitutional Convention and Territory referendum.
TERMS OF REFERENCE

On 28 August 1985, the Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory of Australia by resolution established the Select Committee on Constitutional Development.

Amendments to the Committee's original terms of reference were made when it was reconstituted on 28 April 1987. On 30 November 1989, the Legislative Assembly further resolved to amend the terms of reference by changing the Committee's status to a Sessional Committee. On 4 December 1990 and on 27 June 1994, it was again reconstituted with no further change to its terms of reference.

The original resolutions were passed in conjunction with proposals then being developed in the Northern Territory for a grant of Statehood to the Territory within the Australian federal system. The terms of reference include, as a major aspect of the work of the Committee, a consideration of matters connected with a new State constitution.

The primary terms of reference of the Sessional Committee are as follows:

"(1)... a committee to be known as the Sessional Committee on Constitutional Development, be established to inquire into, report and make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on -

(a) a constitution for the new State and the principles upon which it should be drawn, including -

(i) legislative powers;
(ii) executive powers;
(iii) judicial powers; and
(iv) the method to be adopted to have a draft new State constitution approved by or on behalf of the people of the Northern Territory; and

(b) the issues, conditions and procedures pertinent to the entry of the Northern Territory into the Federation as a new State; and

(c) such other constitutional and legal matters as may be referred to it by -

(i) relevant Ministers, or
(ii) resolution of the Assembly.

(2) the Committee undertake a role in promoting the awareness of constitutional issues to the Northern Territory and Australian populations."

DISCUSSION AND INFORMATION PAPERS AND REPORTS

The Committee has prepared and issued a number of papers and an interim report arising from its terms of reference, as follows:
* A Discussion Paper on a Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory, plus an illustrated booklet of the same name.

* Discussion Paper No. 4, Recognition of Aboriginal Customary Law.

* Discussion Paper No. 5, The Merits or Otherwise of Bringing an NT Constitution into Force Before Statehood.

* Discussion Paper No. 6, Aboriginal Rights and Issues - Options for Entrenchment.

* Discussion Paper No. 8, A Northern Territory Bill of Rights?

* Discussion Paper No. 9, Constitutional Recognition of Local Government.

* Information Paper No. 1, Options for a Grant of Statehood.

* Interim Report No. 1, A Northern Territory Constitutional Convention.

* Exposure Draft - Parts 1 to 7: A new Constitution for the Northern Territory and Tabling Statement.
Additional Provisions to the Exposure Draft on a new Constitution
for the Northern Territory

November 1995
Mr Speaker, I lay on the table a Paper entitled 'Additional Provisions to the Exposure Draft on a new Constitution for the Northern Territory'.

Mr Speaker, I move that the Paper be printed.

Mr Speaker, I move that the Assembly note the Paper.

Mr Speaker, on 22 June 1995, I laid on the table the 'Exposure Draft Parts 1 to 7: A new Constitution for the Northern Territory'. That document was the culmination of almost ten years of hard work and co-operation from both sides of the House that are represented on this Committee.

That Exposure Draft encapsulated the main elements of a proposed constitution for the Northern Territory and for the first time in Australia's constitutional history recognised the major role of Aboriginal people in the foundation of this Country and to the contribution that they have made as an integral and valued part of the Territory community.

The additional provisions to the Exposure Draft is also the culmination of the strong bipartisan effort in making a draft constitution for the Northern Territory a reality.

Mr Speaker, I would like to place on public record the contribution of past and present members of this House, in particular, the former Member for Arnhem, whose important contribution to the process of constitution-making in the Northern Territory and his striving for reconciliation between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal people will not be forgotten.
The former Member for Arnhem's ideals, intentions and vision for a united, harmonious and tolerant Northern Territory run through the pages of this document and the Exposure Draft. I believe that there is no more fitting way than to uphold his vision for his people than through what is expressed in these documents.

Mr Speaker, the Committee has been proceeding with the preparation of a draft constitution, and on 22 June 1995, an Exposure Draft Constitution was tabled. During those sittings, I informed the House that there would be additional clauses to be released for public comment as they were completed. Since that time, the Committee has proceeded to formulate additional provisions to that Exposure Draft and this document includes some of the essential elements that were not canvassed in the earlier document.

Mr Speaker, I wish to speak on the additional provisions. Firstly, the amendment procedures to the Constitution and Organic laws. Any amendment to the Constitution and Organic laws will require a special procedure in order to effect any change. These special measures are:

- an enactment of a Bill to amend the Constitution or an Organic law. The procedure for the passage of the Bill through the House will require it to sit for a period of at least two calendar months between voting on its second and third readings;

- during the intervening period the Bill will be submitted to a Standing Committee on the Constitution and Organic Laws which will consider and report on the proposed amendment; and

- once the Bill proposing the amendment to the Constitution has passed through the House, and upon the assent by the Governor, it shall be put to a referendum of electors of the Northern Territory qualified to vote at an election of the members of the Parliament. A referendum question must be carried at the referendum to which it is put, by valid affirmative votes equal to, or more than 50% of the total number of valid votes cast at the referendum.

It is important to note that a referendum is required, only in respect of amending the Constitution. Any amendment to an Organic law will not require it to go through the referendum stage, however, all of the other elements that are in place to amend the Constitution would apply.

Mr Speaker, I mentioned earlier the Standing Committee on the Constitution and Organic Laws and I would like to elaborate briefly in respect of its establishment. The Committee considered a number of alternatives regarding citizens' initiated referendums which ranged from constitutional change, legislative change or veto, changes in government policy, and to the recall of elected and appointed officials. In considering these issues the Committee accepted that there is some merit in the various alternatives, but it was not convinced that the advantages outweighed the disadvantages.

However, the Committee did see merit in a system which facilitates at reasonable intervals, public involvement and debate for constitutional review, providing that the final decision as to whether any proposals for constitutional change that is to be put to a referendum, is left with the new State Parliament.

The new provision in the Constitution reflects this position through the establishment of the Standing Committee. Its powers and functions would be provided by the Standing Orders of the Parliament and its membership would comprise of Members of Parliament and such other persons as specified in the Standing Orders.

The new provision also provides for a procedure in receiving petitions from persons in the Northern Territory requesting an amendment to this Constitution or an Organic law. For the Standing Committee to consider a request by petition, the petition requires that it be signed by ten (10) per cent of the electors qualified to vote at the election of the members of the Parliament.

Mr Speaker, another important addition to the Exposure Draft, is the inclusion of a new preamble and new expressed provisions recognising the diverse backgrounds and cultures of the people who reside in the Northern Territory in not unreasonably denying them the right -

- to use, speak and understand their own language; and
- to observe and practice their own social and cultural customs and traditions, beliefs, ceremonies or religion.

The Committee in proposing certain expressed constitutional rights, has recognised the special multicultural nature of the Northern Territory and the harmonious relationships among its people. The Committee has been acutely conscious of the importance in maintaining and improving this relationship for the common benefit of all Territorians and their descendants into the future.

The new preamble also reflects the recognition of the Aboriginal people of the Northern Territory to be self-determining in exercising control over all facets of their daily lives. In giving strength to this preamble a new expressed provision headed 'Aboriginal self-determination' is now included under Part 7 of the Exposure Draft Constitution. This provision recognises the special place that Aboriginal people have in the Northern Territory and it provides a mechanism for Parliament through enactment to enhance the activity of Aboriginal people in exercising control over their daily affairs in order to safeguard, strengthen and develop their language, social and cultural customs and traditions, religion or beliefs, economies and identities.

In considering the special place of Aboriginal people of the Northern Territory, the Committee was conscious of the need to reflect this recognition not only in the Preamble acknowledging Aboriginal occupation of this Country prior to European settlement, but also through expressed enforceable provisions within the Constitution that addressed land rights, the protection of sacred sites, the recognition of Aboriginal customary law and Aboriginal self-determination.

Nowhere in any Australian jurisdiction has the above additional provisions been included in any constitutional document to this extent. The Committee has considered these issues long and hard, and it has resolved that they should be included in a Northern Territory constitution under a framework of a united, harmonious and tolerant society.

Mr Speaker, the Committee has also considered the inclusion in the Exposure Draft, the constitutional recognition of the system of local government. As with all State Constitutions in Australia local government is now recognised as the third sphere of government. The Committee considered the various submissions and State Constitutions as to what would effectively apply within the Northern Territory. Apart from mainstream local government, the Committee also took into account those local governing bodies established within Aboriginal communities.

This additional provision on local government provides for a measure of autonomy and the important elements that Parliament shall take into account when legislating in respect of local governing bodies. These are -

- the general competency powers and functions in respect to their -
  - i. objectives, powers, functions and responsibilities;
  - ii. rating and any other forms of revenue, expenditure and fiscal accountability;
  - iii. membership;
  - iv. boundaries; and
- protection from dismissal without having a public enquiry as to the reasons for its dismissal.
Mr Speaker, in closing, the Exposure Draft and the additional provisions are based on the premise that the Northern Territory is to be placed on an equal footing with existing States as a pre-condition to any grant of Statehood. They serve not only as a notification to all Australians the intent of the Northern Territory to be an equal partner with the States, within the Australian federation, but they also reflect the developing constitutional issues that could be addressed and developed as a model that other Australian jurisdictions could follow.

The Northern Territory has taken on the challenge to develop a constitution that reflects all aspects of modern day Northern Territory society and its values. Only through the process of collaboration and consultation with the citizens of the Northern Territory, the Commonwealth and the States, can Statehood for the Northern Territory become a reality.

Let us work towards that end.

Mr Speaker, I commend the additional provisions to the Exposure Draft Constitution for the Northern Territory to Honourable Members.

PREAMBLE

Please Note: The original Preamble 15 in the Exposure Draft will be renumbered to Preamble 16

15. The people of the Northern Territory are concerned to preserve a harmonious and tolerant and united multicultural society, and to this end, it is desirable that no person should be unreasonably denied the right to use his or her own language in communicating with others speaking or understanding the same language, to observe and practice his or her own social and cultural customs and traditions in common with others of the same tradition, and to manifest his or her own religion or belief in worship, ceremony, observance, practice or teaching, and that within the framework of such a society, the people of the Northern Territory recognise that the Aboriginal people of the Northern Territory are entitled, under and in accordance with this Constitution and the laws of the Northern Territory, to self-determination in the control of their daily affairs.

Purpose of the Clause: Preamble 15
Provides for the recognition of the diverse backgrounds and cultures of the people who reside in the Northern Territory and for the preservation of a harmonious, tolerant and united multicultural society, recognises that no person be unreasonably denied the right -

- to use, speak and understand the languages with which they are familiar; and
- to practice their own social and cultural customs, traditions, religion or beliefs.

The preamble also recognises the special position that Aboriginal people have in the Northern Territory and that they are entitled, under and in accordance with this Constitution and the laws of the Northern Territory, to self-determination in the control of their daily affairs.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No Change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No Change.

Division 2 - Amendment of the Constitution and Organic Laws

2.4 CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

(1) This Constitution may only be amended in accordance with the provisions of this section, and not otherwise.

(2) Subject to section 2.6(4) an amendment to this Constitution shall not take effect unless a Bill for an Act of Parliament has first been enacted by the Parliament, setting out the precise terms of the proposed amendment and providing for the question of its adoption to be submitted to a referendum of electors of the Northern Territory on that proposed amendment. That Bill shall not be taken to have been enacted unless:-

(a) there was a period of at least two calendar months between voting on its second reading and voting on its third reading;

(b) if the Bill was amended in Committee other than by way of minor drafting or consequential amendments, there was a period of at least two calendar months between voting on the last amendment to the Bill and voting on its third reading as amended; and

(c) there was an opportunity in its second reading for debate on its merits.

(3) The Speaker shall present to the Governor for assent a Bill passed in accordance with this section, and on so doing must certify to the Governor whether the requirements of subsection (2) have been complied with.

(4) A certificate referred to in subsection (3) shall state the date on which the votes on the second and third readings of the Bill were taken, the date of voting on the last amendment of the Bill (if any) in Committee and the date or dates upon which opportunity for debate on the merits of the Bill in its second reading occurred, and is, in the absence of proof to the contrary, conclusive evidence of the matters so stated.

(5) Upon assent by the Governor to the Bill, the question of the adoption of the proposed amendment shall, not earlier than three calendar months after that date of assent and not later than 12 calendar months after that date, be submitted to a referendum of electors of the Northern Territory qualified to vote at an election of the members of the Parliament.

(6) Except where otherwise provided in this Constitution a referendum question must be carried at the referendum to which it is put by valid affirmative votes equal to or more than 50% of the total number of valid votes cast at the referendum.

(7) The Speaker shall present to the Governor a certificate as to the results of a referendum held in accordance with this section, and on doing so must certify to the Governor whether the requirements of this section as to the referendum have been complied with.

(8) The certificate referred to in subsection (7) shall state:-

(a) the date or dates on or over which the referendum was held;
(b) the number of valid votes cast at the referendum; and
(c) the numbers of valid affirmative votes cast at the referendum;
and is, in the absence of proof to the contrary, conclusive evidence of the matters so stated.

(9) Upon the referendum question being carried in accordance with this section, the amendment shall be effective on the date that the Speaker presents the certificate to the Governor under subsection (7), or on such other date as is specified in the amendment.

Purpose of the Clause: 2.4 Constitutional Amendment

This clause is a new insertion into the Exposure Draft and it continues on from Clause 2.3. It provides for an amendment procedure to this Constitution. Although somewhat detailed the salient points are:

- The amendment procedure provides for a Bill for an Act of the Parliament to amend this Constitution and it shall not be enacted unless there has been a period of least two (2) calendar months between voting on its second reading and voting on its third reading.
- Before the Bill proceeds to the third reading, it shall be submitted to a Standing Committee established by this Constitution — see Clause 2.6 — to consider and report on the proposed amendment to the Parliament.
- Subsequent to the third reading, the Speaker shall certify to the Governor, prior to his or her assent to the Bill, that the procedures have been complied with in accordance with this Constitution.
- Upon the assent of the Governor, the adoption of the propose amendment shall be put to a referendum of electors of the Northern Territory qualified to vote at an election of the members of the Parliament.
- The referendum to adopt the proposed amendment must be held no earlier than three (3) months and no later than twelve months after assent has been given by the Governor.
- Except where it is provided in this Constitution, a referendum question must be carried at the referendum to which it is put, by valid affirmative votes equal to or more than 50% of the total number of valid votes cast at the referendum.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No Change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No Change.

Reference to Discussion and Information Papers: See Discussion Paper on A Proposed New State Constitution for the Northern Territory, 1987: (Part E: pp 36-37).
2.5 AMENDMENT OF ORGANIC LAWS

(1) An Organic Law may only be amended either by an amendment of this Constitution under section 2.4 or by a Bill enacted in accordance with the provisions of this section, and not otherwise.

(2) Subject to sections 2.3(6) and 2.6(4), a Bill for an Act of Parliament for the amendment, in whole or part, of an existing Organic Law, and whether by way of an amendment of a provision of that Organic Law or by the insertion of a new provision in that Organic Law, shall not take effect as an amendment of that Organic Law unless it is enacted by the Parliament in the same manner as required by section 2.3 for the enactment of an Act of the Parliament which itself expressly states that it is an Organic Law and which would, upon assent, be an Organic Law.

Purpose of the Clause: 2.5 Amendment of Organic Laws

This clause is a new insertion into the Exposure Draft and it provides for an amendment procedure to the Organic laws that have been declared by this Constitution to be an Organic law or to an Act of Parliament which expressly states that it is an Organic law — see Clause 2.3. The amendment procedures follow closely to those procedures required to amend this Constitution, however, any amendment(s) or insertion(s) to an Organic law do not require that they be put to a referendum for adoption.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No Change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No Change.

2.6 STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION AND ORGANIC LAWS

(1) The Parliament shall appoint a Standing Committee to be known as the Standing Committee on the Constitution and Organic Laws.

(2) The powers, functions, privileges and procedures of the Committee shall be as provided in the Standing Rules and Orders of the Parliament.

(3) The Committee shall be composed of such members of the Parliament and other persons, holding office on such terms and conditions, as are specified in the Standing Rules and Orders of the Parliament.
(4) A Bill for an Act to amend this Constitution or to amend an Organic Law shall not proceed to a second reading in the Parliament unless the proposal contained in the Bill has first been considered by the Committee and the Committee has reported on the proposal to the Parliament.

(5) The Committee may receive and consider a petition from persons from the Northern Territory requesting an amendment of this Constitution or of an Organic Law, and the Committee may report to the Parliament thereon.

(6) The Committee shall consider a reference from the Parliament by way of a resolution of Parliament, following the introduction of the Bill into the Parliament proposing an amendment of this Constitution or of an Organic Law or on any other matter, and the Committee shall report to the Parliament thereon as soon as practicable thereafter.

(7) The Committee shall receive and consider a petition from persons from the Northern Territory if the petition is signed by at least ten (10) per cent of the numbers of electors qualified to vote at an election of members of the Parliament and on the roll for such an election at the time the petition is presented to the Committee, the petition requesting an amendment of this Constitution or of an Organic Law, and the Committee shall report to the Parliament on any such petition as soon as practicable thereafter.

(8) The Committee shall not be restricted to the subject matter of any petition or any resolution in making its report to the Parliament, but may consider any other options and all matters incidental to or consequential upon that subject matter or those options.

(9) Where the Committee, in its report, makes recommendations to the Parliament for the amendment of the Constitution, and the recommended amendment deals with 2 or more separate and distinct subject matters, then the Committee shall also recommend that the question of the adoption of the proposed amendment at a subsequent referendum shall be dealt with by way of separate questions for each such separate and distinct subject matter.

(10) The reports of the Committee shall be tabled in the Parliament.
Purpose of the Clause: 2.6 Standing Committee on the Constitution and Organic Laws

Provides for the establishment of a Standing Constitutional Committee for the purpose of considering and reporting to the Parliament on proposals to amend this Constitution or an Organic law. The Committee's powers and functions are provided by the Standing Orders of the Parliament and its membership is comprised of members of Parliament and such other persons as specified in the Standing Orders. This clause also provides for a procedure in receiving petitions from persons in the Northern Territory requesting an amendment of this Constitution or an Organic law. For the Standing Committee to be required to consider a request by petition, the petition requires that it be signed by ten (10) per cent of the electors qualified to vote at the election of the members of the Parliament.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No Change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No Change.

PART 7 - ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

7.3 ABORIGINAL SELF-DETERMINATION.

Subject to this Constitution, an Act of the Parliament may provide for the grant of Aboriginal self-determination and for all matters incidental thereto.

Purpose of the Clause: 7.3 Aboriginal self-determination

Provides a positive mechanism for Parliament through enactment in recognising the special place that Aboriginal people have in the Northern Territory which could take effect through a wide variety of processes that would formally recognise and enhance the control over their daily lives in order to safeguard, strengthen and develop their language, social and cultural customs and traditions, religion or beliefs, economies and identities.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No Change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No Change.

PART 8 - RIGHTS IN RESPECT OF LANGUAGE, SOCIAL, CULTURAL AND RELIGIOUS MATTERS

8.1 LANGUAGE, SOCIAL, CULTURAL AND RELIGIOUS MATTERS

(1) Notwithstanding anything in the laws of the Northern Territory other than as provided in sub-sections (2) and (3), a person shall not be denied the right —

(a) to use his or her own language in his or her communications with other people speaking or understanding the same language;
(b) to observe and practice his or her own social and cultural customs and traditions in his or her relations with other people of the same tradition; and
(c) to manifest his or her religion or belief in worship, ceremony, observance, practice or teaching.

(2) The rights in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of subsection (1) shall be subject to this Constitution, any Organic law and any reasonable regulation imposed by an Act of the Parliament in the public interest.

(3) The rights in paragraphs (b) and (c) of subsection (1) shall only operate to the extent that they are not repugnant to the general principles of humanity as contained in any international agreement to which Australia is a party.

Purpose of the Clause: 8.1 Language, social, cultural and religious matters
Provides an expressed provision in the Constitution recognising that the people of the Northern Territory come from very diverse backgrounds and cultures and that they should not be unreasonably denied the right to use and speak and understand their own language and to observe and practice their own social and cultural customs and traditions, beliefs, ceremonies or religion.

Variations:
(a) Republic: No Change.
(b) Pre—Statehood: No Change.

PART 9 LOCAL GOVERNING BODIES

9.1 LOCAL GOVERNMENT

(1) Subject to this Constitution, an Organic law or an Act of the Parliament there shall continue to be a system of local government in the Northern Territory under which local governing bodies are constituted with such powers as the Parliament considers necessary for the peace, order and good government of those areas of the Northern Territory that are from time to time subject to that system of local government;

(2) The manner in which local governing bodies are constituted, and the nature and extent of their powers, functions, duties and responsibilities and all matters incidental thereto, shall be determined by or under this Constitution, or an Organic law or Acts of the Parliament from time to time in force;

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (2) the Parliament shall, when enacting legislation in respect of local governing bodies, provide for -

(a) general competency powers and functions in respect to their -
   (i) objectives, powers, functions and responsibilities;

PART [number to be determined] DEFINITIONS

"Aboriginal self-determination"

"Aboriginal self-determination" means the activity of Aboriginal people in the Northern Territory exercising control over their daily lives in order to safeguard, strengthen and develop their language, social and cultural customs and traditions, religion or beliefs, economies and identities.

Purpose of the Definition: "Aboriginal self-determination"

This definition is a statement of what Aboriginal self-determination means in respect of the provisions that relate to Aboriginal matters under this Constitution. It provides for clarification of the special place that Aboriginal people have in the Northern Territory particularly relating to the exercise of control over their daily lives, in order to safeguard, strengthen and develop their language, social and cultural customs and traditions, religion or beliefs, economies and identities. It also acts as a linkage between the various mechanisms that reflect the processes relating to Aboriginal self-determination in the Northern Territory that operate within the framework of this Constitution.

Variations:

(a) Republic: No Change.

(b) Pre—Statehood: No Change.
